Exon Refuses To Support Aid For Mental Retardation Programs

By BOB GUENTHER
Star Staff Writer

Gov. J. James Exon Tuesday said he will not support a deficit appropriation of any amount for community mental retardation programs and added he is weighing withdrawing from a lawsuit settlement aimed at reducing the population of the Beatrice State Home.

Instead, Exon called on the retardation programs to end their "mismanagement" of funds by cutting administrative expenses and to end criticism of the Beatrice State Home.

Exon's sharply worded statement was delivered in Omaha the day after parents and relatives of the retarded rallied at the Statehouse demanding added funds for the retardation programs.

That criticism, Exon said, led him to question the intent of people favoring the community programs to live up to a proposed settlement in lawsuit filed against the Beatrice State Home.

"When I signed the settlement agreement involving the Beatrice State Home lawsuit, I did so because I was assured that all interested parties involved would exercise good faith in the implementation of the settlement's provisions.

"It is obvious from recent attacks and less than factual information distributed by the Eastern Nebraska Community Office of Retardation (ENCOR), that good faith on their part is lacking.

"Because of this, I will be discussing with the attorney general the possibility of the state seeking withdrawal from the proposed settlement," Exon said.

In the settlement, Exon, the U.S. Justice Department and the attorney for a mentally retarded person agreed that a team of officials will be set up to evaluate residents of the Beatrice State Home with the goal of reducing the population from the current 1,100 to 250.

In Washington, D.C., Louis Thrasher, a Justice Department attorney, questioned why Exon is considering dissolving the agreement based on criticism from people who are not parties to the agreement.

Exon, in an interview, replied that the community retardation programs and the Nebraska Association for Retarded Citizens, an activist group which staged the rally, are "all tied together." The Justice Department, particularly Thrasher, is also involved with the groups, he said.

If Exon decides to withdraw, presumably the lawsuit would go to trial. U.S. Judge Albert Schatz has not yet ratified the settlement.

On the financial question, the programs and parent group claimed that a deficit appropriation between $1.7 million and $3.5 million was needed to offset diversion Title XX welfare funds to other programs. Unless the money is forthcoming, they warned that lay-offs could hurt the quality of the programs and force some into the Beatrice State Home.

Exon said, "It is time for the professional bureaucrats within ENCOR to recognize that the resources of government are limited and must be distributed in an effort to satisfy not only their but others' needs, such as mental health, the elderly, services for day care, blind and disabled.

"The time when bureaucrats can misuse the retarded citizens they serve in an attempt to justify their exorbitant spending demands is over. What is good for the ENCOR staff is not necessarily good for the retarded."

Exon noted that since he has taken office, total expenditures for community retardation efforts have increased from $1 million to $14 million a year. That includes federal, state and county funds.

Pointing to the Lancaster Office of Mental Retardation (LOMR) director's $24,500 salary and his three top assistants' $18,000 salaries, Exon suggested the programs are spending too much on administration. ENCOR, he said, spends 20%, or $1.2 million, on administration.

He also noted that one year ENCOR spent $8,000 to transport one retarded person to and from the program.

"This is simply outrageous," Exon said.

After Six Weeks . . .

Youths' Deaths Still Unsolved

By GORDON WINTERS
Star Staff Writer

Although more than six weeks have elapsed since the first body was discovered, the mystery surrounding the deaths of two Lincoln boys remains impenetrable.

Despite the passage of time, however, "lots of leads are coming in," Captain Roger LaPage, head of the criminal division, said Tuesday.

LaPage said that two lie detector tests were being given to Lincolnites Tuesday in connection with the case.

South Dakota authorities are also checking an individual in the state who has reportedly been talking about the case and who was in Lincoln when Jacob Surber, 12, and Jon Simpson, 13, disappeared during a State Fair outing on Aug. 30.

Two Plainclothesmen

LaPage said that enough leads are still present in the case to keep a minimum of two plainclothes detectives busy daily.

Many leads have not panned out, LaPage said.

Lincoln authorities, with the help of other law officers, have determined that Terry Ray Holman, arrested in connection with the abduction of a Carter Lake, Iowa, youth, was in Idaho at the time young Surber and Simpson disappeared in Lincoln.

Local police had said earlier they wanted to question Holman in connection with the deaths.

In mid-October, local authorities went to Georgia to interview people connected with the midway show at the Nebraska State Fair.

LaPage said that a lie detector test was given there to a man who ran a ride at the Nebraska State Fair.

Shortly after Surber's body was discovered in a dirt drainage ditch near the State Fairgrounds on Sept. 8, local investigators traveled to Missouri and Arkansas to interview people traveling with the two main groups who made up the midway show.

Suspect Sought

LaPage said police are still searching for a man who was seen in the area of the railroad tracks south of the fairgrounds on several days shortly after the boys disappeared.

Searches by 20-member or more teams for the missing murder weapon or any other useful information turned up nothing, LaPage said.

After discovery of Surber's body, detectives and police recruits searched surrounding areas step by step.

Later detectives went through buildings on the fairgrounds. The Lancaster sheriff's posse searched the fairgrounds to double-check earlier searches.

The discovery on Sept. 23 of 13-year-old Jon Simpson's body in a railroad hopper car triggered another search of an area surrounding railroad tracks about four blocks east of the ditch where the other boy's body was found.

Although the body was discovered by a worker at Gooch's Mill, the car had been parked at the spot near the fairgrounds from Aug. 29 to Sept. 3.

Simpson's body bore stab wounds, according to an autopsy report. Surber's body was too badly decomposed to show a cause of death. Lancaster County Atty. Ron Lahners has said, however, "you can speculate that both Surber and Simpson died in the same manner."

Rodino Advocates Federal Licenses

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, proposed tough measures Tuesday for registering and licensing every handgun and handgun owner in America.

He also called for banning so-called Saturday night specials, cheaply made, easily concealable weapons. In the Senate, Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., also urged this type of legislation.

Rodino said he wanted to see passed by this Congress a bill that would require every handgun owner in America to obtain federal licenses that would identify owners by name, photograph, fingerprint and Social Security number.

To obtain the identification, an individual would have to swear he was over 21 and not a convicted felon, not mentally incompetent or a drug addict or alcoholic, among other things. His statements would be subjected to verification by the FBI.

In order to buy a gun, under Rodino's recommendations, an individual would have to show the federal identification to a dealer, and then fill out a notification of purchase form. This would be sent to the federal government where the weapon's identification would be recorded.

In addition, guns already in the possession of Americans would have to be registered under similar procedures.

Rodino's recommendations came on the eve of a scheduled session by a House Judiciary subcommittee on crime to draft gun control legislation.

In the Senate, Bayh, chairman of the juvenile delinquency subcommittee, urged the panel to focus on legislation to ban the sale of Saturday night specials.

"We should confine our efforts to the area where we have the biggest problem and where we have the best chance of success," he said.

Bayh said there was no point in "kidding ourselves" about the chances of passing more far-reaching legislation, such as advocated by Sens. Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y., and Charles H. Percy, R-Ill.

Javits and Percy testified in support of their bill to ban residents of major metropolitan areas with high crime rates from owning any kind of handgun.

It also would require persons owning handguns to furnish the attorney general with their name, address, Social Security number, and the serial number of the gun.

These provisions are in addition to others to prohibit the manufacture, sale or possession of handguns unsuitable for law enforcement, military or sporting use.

Bayh noted that in 1972 when the Senate passed a bill banning the sale of easily conceable handguns, an amendment to outlaw private possession of all handguns got only 7 votes and another to require registration of all firearms got only 11.

Furthermore, Bayh emphasized that the bill the Senate did pass got nowhere in the House.

Franco Suffers Grave Setback

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Gen. Francisco Franco, at the brink of death from a series of heart attacks, suffered a sharp setback Tuesday with the development of an intestinal blood clot, his doctors reported.

They said the 82-year-old generalissimo was in "extraordinarily grave" condition.

A bulletin from the 13-doctor medical team said that in addition to Franco's perilous heart condition and blood clot, he is suffering increased internal bleeding and intestinal paralysis.

One of his doctors said the tough old general opened his eyes briefly and wept when he was presented with a cloak of the Virgin of Pilar, Spain's patron saint. Franco has controlled the nation's destiny since the 1936-39 civil war.

Archbishop Pedro Cantero Cuadrado of Zaragoza carried the robe into the bedroom where Franco was surrounded by members of his family, the doctor said. He added that Franco had asked to see the cloak when the prelate visited him Monday.

Franco was given last rites of the Roman Catholic Church Saturday.

His severe relapse caught the nation by surprise. An earlier announcement said he had strengthened sufficiently to eat breakfast.

Franco's death would automatically transfer power to his hand-picked heir, Prince Juan Carlos de Borbon and bypass the complicated constitutional process of declaring Franco physically unable to lead the country.

His lingering illness has caused Spanish officials to express fear over the power vacuum.

One highly placed source said plans had been laid to decide within 24 hours whether to name the prince temporary head of state. "We cannot wait much longer to see what will happen with the general," he said, "and we cannot go on without an active leader."

Premier Carlos Arias Navarro had returned to Franco's suburbn Pardo Palace a few minutes before the grim medical bulletin was released.

It said: "The cardiac situation has not changed since the last bulletin. His general state has worsened during the last hours. Hemorrhage of the digestive system has increased.

"An intestial paralysis with ascites (dropsy) caused by thrombosis (clotting) of the mesenteric veins has set in. The state is extraordinary grave."

The previous medical bulletin said Franco had spent a "restful night and morning."

As Franco's fight extended, his government's dilemma grew. Sources close to his Pardo Palace said that in recent days the ailing head of state has seen "very few people" — close family, a "very limited number of friends" and a few high military officials. They indicated he had not seen his premier, Arias Navarro, the man who would take him the papers and decrees now piling up for his signature.

If Franco does not sign power temporarily over to Juan Carlos, his handpicked heir, Arias Navarro can invoke Article 11 of the constitution and send a letter to parliament to inform it that Franco's "infirmity" has necessitated a handover to the prince.

Juan Carlos held power for 40 days last year, when Franco was hospitalized with a blood clot in his right leg.

Underlining Spain's uneasiness, a leading news magazine, Actualidad, ran a cover story on Franco's lingering illness entitled "National Anxiety." The daily newspaper Nuevo Diario suggested Franco should be relieved of power, "although humanly difficult to decide."

Foremost in their minds was the question of the Spanish Sahara, which Spain reportedly is planning to cede to Morocco to halt an invasion of 350,000 civilians now marching toward the phosphate-rich territory. Government officials noted there could be no change in the status of the Sahara without the seal of approval of a head of state.

In Bilbao in northern Spain, meanwhile, police arrested 20 suspected terrorists including six commandos of the Basque guerrilla organization ETA — Basque Land and Liberty. They said another 20 alleged terrorists had fled across the border to sanctuary in France.

LES Will Make Last Ditch Effort

By LYNN ZERSCHLING
Star Staff Writer

Lincoln Electric System Administrator Walt Canney said Tuesday he's going to make a last ditch effort to persuade Omaha Public Power District officials to accept Lincoln's latest nuclear power plant offer.

Canney said he talked to OPPD General Manager Ralph Shaw concerning the Lincoln City Council's latest nuclear power plant arrangement. Shaw did not flatly turn down Lincoln, Canney said.

OPPD To Refuse

However, Shaw reportedly has indicated OPPD would not accept the City Council's latest offer. Representatives from the Nebraska Public Power District also have indicated they won't go along with the plan.

Monday night the council reversed two previous decisions rejecting part-ownership in OPPD's proposed Ft. Calhoun No. 2 nuclear unit. The council placed a $129-million limit on LES participation in the project. Lincoln's monetary participation in the project would be fixed, therefore. The percentage of ownership would depend on the final cost of Ft. Calhoun, estimated at $810 million.

Councilman Bob Jeambey provided the swing vote which brought about the latest nuclear plant decision. Jeambey criticized LES for not proposing such a dollar ceiling in previous discussions.

Referring to Jeambey's comments, Canney said LES "actively pursued this with due diligence" several weeks ago.

However, NPPD and OPPD flatly rejected that ceiling since the two utilities believe Lincoln should bear both the costs and benefits of Ft. Calhoun ownership.

Canney said he will try to persuade OPPD staff to reconsider its stance, since LES believes nuclear produced electricity will be the cheapest power produced in the near future.

The council's compromise plan "is not our cup of tea, not our recommendation and there are not many precedents," Canney said.

Not Going To Cry

"We're not going to cry, but try" to get the latest plan approved, he asserted.

Earlier this month the City Council rejected the LES recommendation to become 13% owners in the plant. A council majority also rejected a 10% ownership deal last week on the grounds that Lincoln's final bill was not known.

In a related development Tuesday, Mayor Helen Boosalis said she still is considering the countil's action. The mayor has until Tuesday to veto that decision.

Following the council's earlier decision to reject the Ft. Calhoun ownership, Mayor Boosalis said she concurred with the council's action.

Newport, R.I. (UPI) — Ilse Nessima, 44, has whipped up her husband's favorite dessert — apple pie. "I did it from scratch," she said, "and I am preparing to have dinner by candlelight."

Divorcee Fredie Fernandez, 30, plans to take a couple of male friends out to lunch. "I'll be extra kind and nice to the guys I work with, too."

Thelma Glenon, 58, a program director for a senior citizens center, said she is going to "do everything she can to make her husband and son kings for a day. I'm also going to be extra nice to every man who comes in this center."

All three women plan to participate Wednesday in "Male Appreciation Day" which got started here as a counteraction to the "Alice Doesn't" strike called by the National Organization of Women.

Mayor Humphrey J. Donnelly III has signed a proclamation declaring Wednesday "MAD Day" and he says he thinks his wife will cook his breakfast.

"Women who are interested in turning around the bad reputation that NOW has given them should plan to do something extra special for their husbands, boyfriends, or bosses," said Mrs. Nessima.

The woman who thought up "MAD Day" is Fredie Fernandez, a talk show hostess at local radio station WADK.

"I asked my callers what could be done. It is about time a majority of women made a statement about their lifestyles," she said.

Not only has Mrs. Nessima made an apple pie but she says she plans to serve breakfast in bed to her husband, a retired naval officer.

Divorcee Fredie Fernandez, 30, plans to take a couple of male friends out to lunch. "I'll be extra kind and nice to the guys I work with, too."

Thelma Glenon, 58, a program director for a senior citizens center, said she is going to "do everything she can to make her husband and son kings for a day. I'm also going to be extra nice to every man who comes in this center."

All three women plan to participate Wednesday in "Male Appreciation Day" which got started here as a counteraction to the "Alice Doesn't" strike called by the National Organization of Women.

Mayor Humphrey J. Donnelly III has signed a proclamation declaring Wednesday "MAD Day" and he says he thinks his wife will cook his breakfast.

"Women who are interested in turning around the bad reputation that NOW has given them should plan to do something extra special for their husbands, boyfriends, or bosses," said Mrs. Nessima.

The woman who thought up "MAD Day" is Fredie Fernandez, a talk show hostess at local radio station WADK.

"I asked my callers what could be done. It is about time a majority of women made a statement about their lifestyles," she said.

Not only has Mrs. Nessima made an apple pie but she says she plans to serve breakfast in bed to her husband, a retired naval officer.

Americans Convoyed To Airport In Lebanon

. . . Gunmen Battle Outside Parliament

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Moslem and Christian gunmen battled outside Lebanon's Parliament on Tuesday as convoys of Americans and other foreigners sped to the airport for flights out of this strife-torn capital.

Marine guards at the U.S. Embassy changed from dress blues to combat fatigues and flak jackets when stray rounds from a nearby combat zone began hitting the building. Rocket-propelled grenades and machine-gun bursts slammed into three of Beirut's most expensive hotels.

Nonstop fighting made it impossible to accurately count casualties, but officials said 17 persons were killed and more than 20 wounded in one Moslem area alone when it came under a Christian shelling. They had estimated that 120 died on Monday.

Premier Rashid Karami announced another cease-fire bid to end the war between Christian militiamen and Palestinian-led Moslems. He said a nine-man "security group" would meet in his office until it comes up with "effective measures to end once and for all the tragedy that has been gripping Lebanon." The group represents leftist, rightist and religious groups involved in the fighting.

The bloody street war has slowly paralyzed government, commerce and basic public services in this small Arab nation of three million.

The gun battle outside Parliament House prevented Lebanon's 99-man National Assembly from meeting to discuss the crisis. Deputies had to be evacuated in armored cars.

Witnesses said several vehicles filled with leftist Moslem gunmen drove past the parliament building just before the meeting started, shouting insults at the deputies. Bodyguards of Pierre Gemayel, leader of the Christian Phalange party, opened up on the Moslems, and one gunman on each side was killed before the shooting stopped.

House Speaker Kamel Assad called it "an attempt to assassinate the democratic establishment in Lebanon. I declare such an attempt will never succeed and we will continue to meet." He scheduled another meeting session Thursday morning "to give deputies time to reach the building safely."

Beirut radio said most streets were "swept by machine gun battles, sniping and bombing attacks, in addition to mortar and rocket duels in the city and on its outskirts. Appeals to stop shooting at ambulances and fire engines are not being heeded by the warring factions."

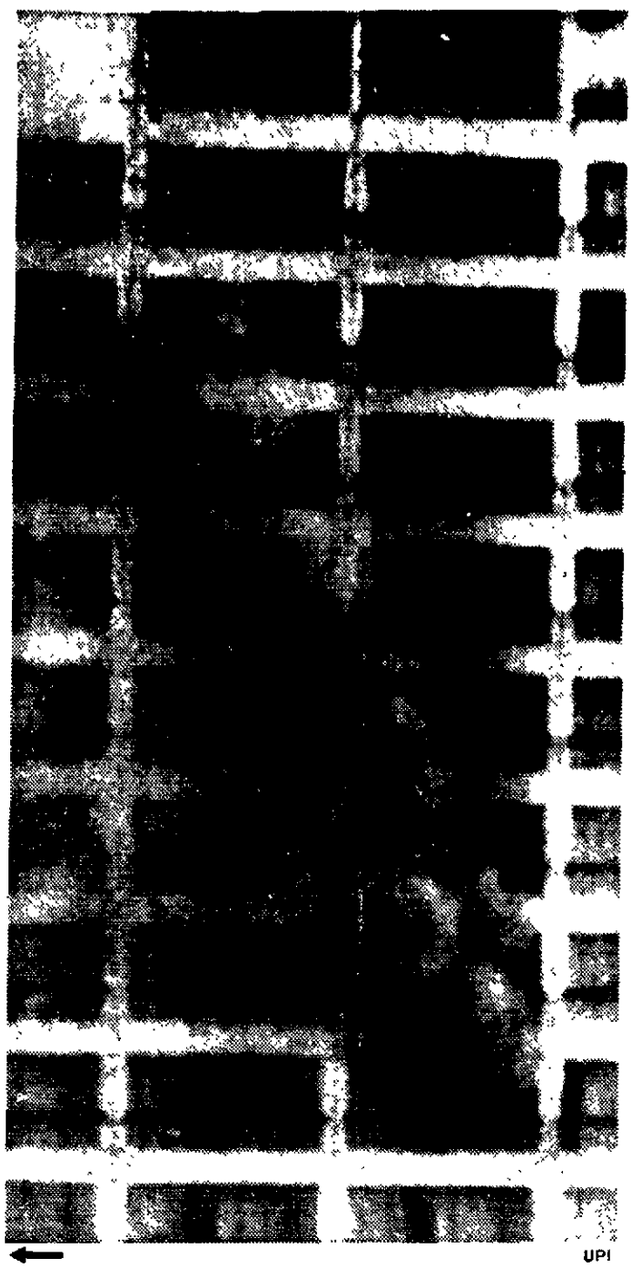

Foreign residents have been leaving Lebanon since intercommunal fighting began last April, but the trickle became a torrent after embassies advised all dependents and nonessential personnel to leave.

A convoy of 40 cars took American families from a seaside hotel to he international airport. Embassy sources said more than 100 Americans had registered for another convoy Wednesday.

The United Nations offered evacuation to 550 family members of 230 staff members working in eight agencies. A spokesman said there was no immediate plan to evacuate U.N. employes, only their families.

U.S. Ambassador G. McMurtrie Godley worked at the embassy compound with a skeleton staff of diplomats as bullets zinged outside. Steel shutters were lowered at windows and Marine guards manned the entrance with automatic rifles and shotguns.

Several hundred yards away from the embassy in the Moslem quarter of Ein Mreisseh, Lebanese gunmen and Palestinian guerrillas crouched behind street barricades and swapped shots with Phalange snipers.

U.S. Remains Vulnerable

Washington — The United States remains vulnerable to another foreign oil embargo despite presidential exhortations and congressional debates, with the goal of "energy independence" still distant. Government analysts believe that as the American economy climbs out of recession, energy consumption and oil imports will resume their long-term upward trend. Because Canada has cut back on exports to the United States, the Arab countries now provide an even larger share of this country's oil than in 1973.

Treasures To Be Shown

Washington — An exhibition of 53 treasures from the tomb of the Egyptian Pharoah Tutankhamen, 19 of which have never before left Egypt, will go on display at the National Gallery here in November 1976, as the start of a two-year, six-city tour. Announcement Tuesday of the arrangements coincided with the Sadat visit.

Trenton, N.J. — As a favor to New York Gov. Hugh L. Carey and at the apparent insistence of high Carey administration officials, Gov. Brendan Byrne is prepared to nominate a New Jersey friend of the Carey family to the Palisades Interstate Park Commission.

Tax Increase Considered

New York — Gov. Hugh L. Carey said he was considering a request for a $300 million corporate tax increase at a special legislative session to help close the deficit in the state budget. He also said in an interview that he would seek additional tax increases to help New York City if the federal government made that a requirement for extending national assistance to avoid default by the city. He said he hoped to deal with the state budget deficit before the regular session of the Legislature in January.

Girl Scouts Exclude Boys

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Girl Scouts voted overwhelmingly Tuesday not to admit boys to their organization.

Boys will be able to participate in Girl Scout activities when invited, however. And about 60,000 adult men will be able to continue as troop leaders, board members and consultants.

The Boy Scouts, which are not affiliated with the Girl Scouts, voted last year to admit girls aged 14 to 21 to their Explorer Division.

But the 1,800 delegates to the Girl Scouts national convention, by a show of hands, backed up their directors who recommended against admitting boys.

Those who wanted boys in the program argued that they would encourage older girls to remain in the scouts and increase membership. By merging girls and boys into one program, they said, it would cut expenses of having duplicate programs.

But the critics, clearly in the majority, said girls mature faster than boys, so grouping them by age would be a problem. They argued that boys would dominate girls and that the organization would lose its all-female identity.

"If we need boys to sell Girl Scouts, we need to re-evaluate our program," said Brenda Akers, 17, of Lawrence, Ind., in preliminary debate Monday. Her comments received much cheering and applause from the delegates, varying in age from young to middle aged and old.

Maureen O'Connell, 17, of Chicago, argued that boys will try to dominate girls when they go on camping trips. "They'll try to tell us how to build campfires and stuff," she said.

Equal Credit Opportunity Act Goes Into Effect

Washington (UPI) — Bankers and creditors were legally bound for the first time Tuesday against using many practices that commonly discriminate against women borrowers.

The new restriction was imposed under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, which Congress enacted a year ago to become effective Tuesday.

Although the Federal Reserve Board wrote many pages of regulations to implement that law, only some of them became effective immediately. Other regulations will go into effect gradually until February 1977.

For example, creditors will not be required to alter their credit application forms until next June 30. Nor will they be required to explain why some applicants are rejected until next Jan. 31.

But many provisions expressing the basic intent of the law do take effect immediately.

Beginning immediately, persons who seek credit from a bank, credit card company, retail store or any other lending institution can expect these new protections:

—A creditor cannot say anything either verbally or in advertisements that would discourage a reasonable person from applying for credit on the basis of sex or marital status.

—A creditor cannot request information about a woman applicant's birth control practices or assume that a women applicant of child-bearing age may not be able to repay a loan.

—Any state laws that prohibit a creditor from extending separate accounts to a husband and wife are no longer valid if each spouse seeks a separate account. Each spouse then will be held solely responsible for his own debt and his finance charges will be computed separately.

—A credit applicant can demand that the creditor consider the history of any account listed in the name of his or her spouse or former spouse that accurately reflects the applicant's ability and willingness to repay.

—Any aggrieved credit applicant can sue the creditor for actual and punitive damages up to $10,000. A class action suit can be brought for penalties up to $100,000 or 1% of the creditor's net worth, whichever is smaller.

By Nov. 1, 1976, creditors will be required to list joint accounts in the names of both spouses who request it, thus providing a credit history for any married persons who does not have a separate income. All borrowers must be informed of that option by Feb. 1, 1977.

Amtrak Warns Chicago—By Mail

(c) Chicago Sun-Times

Chicago — The security force of much-criticized Amtrak warned the Chicago police department to be alert this last weekend for bomb attacks from a Puerto Rican terorist group.

The only trouble was, the Amtrak warning arrived late.

A spokesman for Chicago police said Amtrak security — apparently acting on information from the New York police department — last week prepared a warning to Amtrak police and various police departments to expect attacks from the FALN, the Armed Forces for National Liberation.

The Amtrak entrusted the warning to another government agency, the U.S. Postal Service.

The mailed warning to Chicago police, signed by S. J. Lombardo, manger of Amtrak security for the central region, arrived Monday, after three bombs had exploded.

No More Night Meetings?

City Councilmen Steve Cook and Bob Sikyta have been working on proposed changes in council rules and procedures. From a couple of the recommendations, one can get the impression that the two are trying to stamp out people participation in council meetings.

Cook and Sikyta have recommended that the council do away with its once-a-month nightly meetings on the ostensible grounds that the right type of people aren't being attracted. The council had originally scheduled night meetings with the hope that hourly wage-earners who otherwise couldn't attend would be free to appear on matters that interested them, Sikyta observed. But, he said, that isn't the case. Instead, "some people" (not an hourly wage-earner in the bunch, apparently) are stacking the evening audiences for the purpose of pressuring the council to vote their way on controversial issues, according to Sikyta. For that kind of exercise in participatory democracy, Cook and Sikyta would cancel night meetings. It appears they feel more comfortable in the cozier atmosphere of afternoon meetings when usually the only people who show up are lawyers and land developers.

If there is a change in the night meeting pattern, it should be in the direction suggested by Councilman John Robinson, who brought up the idea that perhaps the council should hold all of its meetings at night so more people could attend.

Another Cook-Sikyta proposal would provide for a uniformed policeman to stand guard during council meetings. This would be consistent with an existing council rule which calls for the presence of a sergeant-at-arms.

Explains Sikyta: "We owe the people that do show up the assurance that there will be security. A uniformed officer would be a sign of law and order."

Is the assumption, then, that "some" people who attend council meetings are not law-abiding and orderly or that council members are not law-abiding and orderly?

Why the need for a uniformed symbol in a city like Lincoln? Isn't the presence of duly-elected representatives in the chamber reminder enough of the rule of law?

If the need for restoring order should ever present itself (in our memory the need hasn't existed; fair-minded council chairmen such as Helen Boosalis and Max Denney have been able to maintain order in the chamber while people have still had the opportunity to express themselves), then an alternative suggested by Cook could be implemented. That is, the installation of a buzzer under the council chairman's desk which could be used to summon police in case of trouble.

But let's not inhibit the process with uniforms.

The proposals for eliminating night meetings and stationing a police officer in the council chamber do not lend themselves to the cause of open government. Hopefully the full council will reject them.

Newest Proposal Shot Down

Not surprisingly, Omaha Public Power District (OPPD) and Nebraska Public Power District (NPPD) have rejected a belated Lincoln offer to invest no more than $129 million in the proposed second nuclear generating facility at Fort Calhoun.

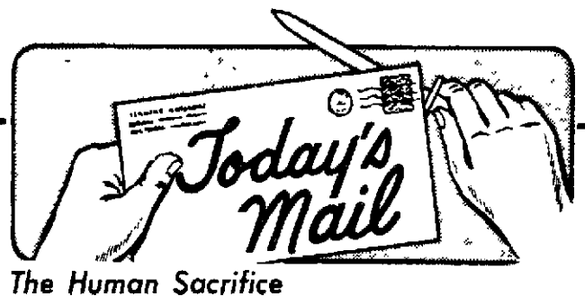

Spokesmen for the two major owners said Tuesday that if Lincoln was to share in the benefits of the plant, it must also share in the risks. Lincoln's 11th hour bid for acceptance of a specific dollar amount investment in lieu of a fixed percentage of ownership was thus rejected.

After a council majority of four twice nixed the original proposal whereby Lincoln would own 13% of Ft. Calhoun No. 2, the Lincoln City Council, due to a change of heart by member Bob Jeambey, Monday voted to offer OPPD and NPPD Lincoln participation in no greater amount than $129 million. This offer spurned, that portion of Lincoln's future power supply plan is back in limbo.

The late Lincoln offer and the response to it again illustrate the cost-awareness of Lincoln officials and the probability that construction costs would far outstrip current estimates. The investment ceiling proposal offered after another 4-3 council vote Monday provided that Lincoln's capital construction contribution would remain the same no matter what cost overruns might occur. Of course, the percentage of Lincoln's plant ownership — and thus the amount of power Lincoln would buy when and if the plant became operational — could and probably would decrease. If Lincoln's investment remained static but the plant cost escalated, would Lincoln be entitled to 12% of plant capacity? Ten per cent, or six per cent? How seriously would a diminished percentage affect the overall future power supply plan?

Those specific questions apparently will not have to be answered now.

But more meetings between the Lincoln Electric System, OPPD, NPPD and council members have been called. And given the new flip-flop tendency on the part of the council, the Ft. Calhoun deal is still up in the air.

The Boxing Ban

Lincoln, Neb.

The Star's article of Oct. 24, "Officials Defend Ban on Prison Inmate Boxing Program" reveals grossly illogical thinking on the part of Parole Board members.

From the account given in the article, inmate-boxers have been banned from participation in community matches because:

(1) Don Blue robbed a store.

(2) "Some of these men have committed crimes of violence."

(3) Inmate boxers have an edge on their opponents because they have so much free time in which to acquire superior skills with which they might defeat their opponents.

(4) These boxers might use the skills which they worked long and hard to develop in ways that are "not in the best interests of the people."

By these four criteria, any convict who uses his time behind the walls to learn a skill of any kind must be locked up forever because:

(1) Don Blue robbed a store.

(2) "Some of these men have committed crimes of violence."

(3) Inmates have "all the free time in the world to practice."

(4) Most any skill from boxing to baking can be used in ways that are "not in the best interests of the people."

I submit that the real reason for the ban is that some of the parole board members lost money betting on an inmate-boxer.

Maybe The New Boys Can Win

HUMPHREY

CARTER

NEW YORK — Two headlines on facing pages of The New York Times suggest another of the many complexities facing the Democratic Party. "Humphrey Leads in Poll of Democrats," says one. "Carter Appears to Hold a Solid Lead in Iowa," says the other, "as the Campaign's First Test Approaches."

Carter? Yes, Jimmy Carter of Georgia took a big lead in a poll of Iowa Democratic leaders taken by The Des Moines Register. And that may indicate that the press and the politicans — both of whom customarily spend much time preparing to fight the last war — have underestimated the new boys, just as they did in 1968 and 1972.

As for the Hubert Humphrey phenomenon, not since the hula hoop and the streak has anything caught on so fast as the notion that a deadlocked Democratic convention will nominate the Minnesota war horse for a second try at the prize he so nearly won in 1968.

When I left in early September for a trip to Europe, for example, dinner table conversations could be turned either to gales of glee or wails of consternation at the mere mention of another Humphrey nomination. Upon my return in mid-October, the Humphrey talk was so widespread that one article was speculating upon the possibility that Humphrey had peaked too soon.

The Humphrey phenomenon has great plausibility. As explored in this space last June, the passions of Vietnam in 1968 have considerably cooled and no commanding Democrat has appeared to dominate talk of 1976. Hence it was almost inevitable that hungry Democrats would begin thinking of their most experienced leader, their most vigorous campaigner, a well-known senator with claims to expertise in both foreign and domestic affairs, as well as close ties to the labor unions and minority groups.

Now the most accepted analysis of the Democratic situation is that either someone emerges through the primaries to win the nomination, which appears unlikely, or a deadlocked convention will turn to Humphrey as a compromise choice. In some versions, Humphrey enters and runs well in the California primary; but the analysts who take this view do not commonly deal with the possibility that he might run badly instead — that a prime ingredient of the Humphrey appeal may be that he is above the battle, not grubbing around in the primaries.

The news from Iowa suggests a major flaw in the either-or analysis. Carter won 23% of the leaders polled, with Humphrey badly trailing at 12%, Sen. Birch Bayh third with 10%, and everybody else an also-ran. Granted that Carter has campaigned in Iowa (relentlessly) and Humphrey has not. That should have been more nearly offset by the fact that Humphrey is the best-known Democrat in the country, after Edward Kennedy.

The Carter showing in fact, calls into question the deadlocked-convention theory, which is the necessary basis of the Humphrey phenomenon. It does so not because it necessarily means Carter will dominate the primaries, or because the Iowa convention in January will necessarily reflect the recent poll. But the results of that poll do suggest that a "new face" like Jimmy Carter can and does make a strong impression when exposed to real live voters and party workers.

The results in other states are likely to reflect the same fact — and it would be just as well to remember that nobody thought Eugene McCarthy could get anywhere in 1968, much less George McGovern in 1972. The new delegate selection rules, together with the formidable presence of George Wallace in most primaries, make it unlikely that anyone can win a first-ballot nomination in 1976. But that does not mean that the primaries will not narrow the field to a few leading candidates. Nor does it insure a real convention deadlock (such as that of 1924, when in another Madison Square Garden the Democrats took 103 ballots to nominate a loser).

Despite the oversimplified either-or thesis (either a winner in the primaries or a compromise on Humphrey), it seems more likely that two or three candidates, or even four — Wallace probably among them — will arrive at the convention as the most consistent and impressive primary winners, each with a big bloc of delegates.

These candidates will surely bargain hard among themselves, trying to put together a ticket within three or four ballots. Why should they tamely permit so-called "party leaders" to negate the whole primary season by "compromising" on a candidate who had not really competed — particularly when in Humphrey's case that could evoke memories of his route to the nomination in 1968?

Nothing, moreover, would more quickly split the Democratic Party than for supporters of the "new faces" to see the Humphrey phenomenon as just one more effort by old-line party leaders and labor bosses to hold on to power fairly lost to a new generation of Democrats.

Great Britain Faces Its Economic Snafu

LONDON — When President Ford was explaining to the leaders of the United States Conference of Mayors some weeks ago why he found the whole idea of federal financial aid for New York City so revolting, the horrible example he kept citing of a government that loses touch with economic reality and spends itself sick was Great Britain, with its Labor government and its welfare state.

Undoubtedly, there is plenty to worry about in Britain's current economic malaise, with unemployment at the highest level since World War II and still rising, the public sector deficit up by almost half over last year, many of the country's major enterprises near collapse and inflation an untamed chewer-up of family incomes. Yet a visitor to London still finds it possible to come away with considerable foundation for hope that, far from being ready for history's dust bin, Britain may be in process of charting some useful new directions for promoting industrial efficiency in an atmosphere of freedom.

The same union leaders who only a few months ago were pushing Britain toward economic suicide in the serene conviction that their members could always use their strike power to force up wages faster than living costs are now the most energetic crusaders for moderation on the pay front in line with Prime Minister Harold Wilson's anti-inflation program.

Luddite tendencies are too well and too widely established to justify optimism about their swift eradication, but there is growing recognition by both the Labor government and its union allies that companies with long records of sinking ever deeper into the red — often because of chronic strikes, overmanning and archaic work rules — will have to be allowed to go under. This represents a near-resolution as against the old tendency to infuse huge public subsidies into such enterprises in a vain effort to make them competitive and thus keep their workers employed.

The new emphasis is on encouraging private investment in profitable industries as a means of generating jobs, a tactic unionists on both sides of the Atlantic have often scorned as reflective of "trickle-down economics," more beneficial to the boss than to the workers.

The left wing of the Labor party. which last week strengthened its grip on the party machinery at the expense of the prime minister and his cabinet, is pushing for a program of forced investments by major exporting companies under planning agreements with the government. Wilson's chief economic adviser, Harold Lever, ridicules any such attempt to foster private enterprise through public coercion as a "contradiction in terms."

The only way to induce expanded investment in Britain's capital-starved industries, in Lever's estimation, is to enlist full union-management cooperation in removing roadblocks to efficiency. "Our real problem," he says, "is how to get the same intelligence applied to making our industries competitive — which means profitable — that the unions have shown in recognizing the self defeating character of the paper chase for more money in the pay packet."

Some approaches to that pivotal task may emerge at a meeting the prime minister plans to hold Nov. 5 at Chequers with his National Economic Development Council, made up of top representatives of industry, the unions and government. That session will try to chart strategies for industrial expansion and establish sub-councils to move forward with specific development plans in companies that can be winners, not losers.

"The first question our people ask," says one top union leader, "is: 'Get more efficient for what — so we can work ourselves out of a job'?" Formidable as is such rank-and-file resistance, the unions are doing more than act as missionaries for increased productivity. They are also holding their fire on demands for vastly expanded government spending to combat unemployment.

The unionists are, it is true, asking a high price in many respects for their hold-the-line posture on wages and budget-busting. They want selective import controls, a disastrous slide toward protectionism for this trading nation. They are also seeking to tip the balance in industrial relations through legal changes that would institutionalize the closed shop and give unions the upper hand in corporate control under the guise of "worker democracy."

The test of whether the weight of union effort will go toward Marxist gamesmanship or toward building on the start toward cooperation currently being made in wage restraint will probably not come until spring when the pinch of the pay policy begins to exert a perceptible squeeze on purchasing power.

But the extent to which leaders such as Jack Jones of the giant Transport and General Workers Union have put their necks out the line to make the policy succeed provides a basis for hope that Britain can pull itself out of its current downspiral, especially if the government's somewhat extravagant expectations for North Sea oil materialize.

JOSEPH PLUMMER

What Is Giscard?

PARIS — Since the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt, American political analysts have fallen into the habit of appraising a new president's performance after his first 100 days in office. French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, in contrast, asked that he be judged by his first 500 days. That milestone having been reached, many Frenchmen and others are taking Giscard at his word.

Generally speaking, the French like what they see. In the most recent poll taken by the French Institute of Public Opinion, nearly 60% of the respondents said they approved of Giscard's performance.

A self-styled "liberal reformer," Giscard has concerned himself with matters of both style and substance. His substantive achievements include more permissive laws on abortion, divorce and contraception. As for stylistic changes, he has abolished the use of aristocratic titles in invitations issued by the Elysee Palace, dined with ordinary French families in their homes, and removed V-E day from the calendar of public events.

Giscard also is admired abroad. The Economist of London asserted that he has "one of the best brains in the Western world, one of the best minds in the financial and perhaps the political business too."

☆ ☆ ☆

And yet, in many ways, Giscard remains an enigma to his countrymen. Interior Minister Michel Poniatowski, one of Giscard's closest associates, expressed this view in a new book: "The many initiatives taken by Valery Giscard d'Estaing to simplify contacts between himself and citizens proceed from this insight: Everything should permit him to perceive from day to day the aspirations and problems of the French people. Elysee Palace, no longer sacrosanct, is no more an ivory tower, refuge of a mysterious and isolated power inherited from Louis XIV, Napoleon, and Charles de Gaulle."

But some political observers here argue that Giscard's conduct of the presidency does indeed have monarchical aspects. They note that the president is highly visible on ceremonial occasions, but virtually out of reach during moments of crisis, such as last year's postal strike. He tends to delegate distasteful political tasks to his ministers.

Sometimes, it would appear, Giscard tries to have it both ways. For example, when French prostitutes occupied churches last spring to protest police harassment, the president expressed sympathy for their plight. At the same time, the Special Minister on the Condition of Women, Francoise Giroud, refused to meet with the protesters. Interior Minister Poniatowski finally ordered police to send the women back into the streets.

Giscard's seeming duplicity led Bernard Chapuis of the Paris newspaper Le Monde to write the following rebuke: "The domain reserved to M. Giscard d'Estaing is liberalism. To his ministers he leaves the realism . . . (Thus he) assumes that role which in the past fell to the church: consoling people in the miseries of this world by announcing to them the ecstasies of the next. Giscardian liberalism is not the stick and the carrot; it is the stick and the crucifix."

Still, it is a brand of liberalism that commands substantial support among the French electorate. And Giscard's term of office has five and one-half years to run.

As for the Hubert Humphrey phenomenon, not since the hula hoop and the streak has anything caught on so fast as the notion that a deadlocked Democratic convention will nominate the Minnesota war horse for a second try at the prize he so nearly won in 1968.

When I left in early September for a trip to Europe, for example, dinner table conversations could be turned either to gales of glee or wails of consternation at the mere mention of another Humphrey nomination. Upon my return in mid-October, the Humphrey talk was so widespread that one article was speculating upon the possibility that Humphrey had peaked too soon.

The Humphrey phenomenon has great plausibility. As explored in this space last June, the passions of Vietnam in 1968 have considerably cooled and no commanding Democrat has appeared to dominate talk of 1976. Hence it was almost inevitable that hungry Democrats would begin thinking of their most experienced leader, their most vigorous campaigner, a well-known senator with claims to expertise in both foreign and domestic affairs, as well as close ties to the labor unions and minority groups.

Now the most accepted analysis of the Democratic situation is that either someone emerges through the primaries to win the nomination, which appears unlikely, or a deadlocked convention will turn to Humphrey as a compromise choice. In some versions, Humphrey enters and runs well in the California primary; but the analysts who take this view do not commonly deal with the possibility that he might run badly instead — that a prime ingredient of the Humphrey appeal may be that he is above the battle, not grubbing around in the primaries.

The news from Iowa suggests a major flaw in the either-or analysis. Carter won 23% of the leaders polled, with Humphrey badly trailing at 12%, Sen. Birch Bayh third with 10%, and everybody else an also-ran. Granted that Carter has campaigned in Iowa (relentlessly) and Humphrey has not. That should have been more nearly offset by the fact that Humphrey is the best-known Democrat in the country, after Edward Kennedy.

The Carter showing in fact, calls into question the deadlocked-convention theory, which is the necessary basis of the Humphrey phenomenon. It does so not because it necessarily means Carter will dominate the primaries, or because the Iowa convention in January will necessarily reflect the recent poll. But the results of that poll do suggest that a "new face" like Jimmy Carter can and does make a strong impression when exposed to real live voters and party workers.

The results in other states are likely to reflect the same fact — and it would be just as well to remember that nobody thought Eugene McCarthy could get anywhere in 1968, much less George McGovern in 1972. The new delegate selection rules, together with the formidable presence of George Wallace in most primaries, make it unlikely that anyone can win a first-ballot nomination in 1976. But that does not mean that the primaries will not narrow the field to a few leading candidates. Nor does it insure a real convention deadlock (such as that of 1924, when in another Madison Square Garden the Democrats took 103 ballots to nominate a loser).

Despite the oversimplified either-or thesis (either a winner in the primaries or a compromise on Humphrey), it seems more likely that two or three candidates, or even four — Wallace probably among them — will arrive at the convention as the most consistent and impressive primary winners, each with a big bloc of delegates.

These candidates will surely bargain hard among themselves, trying to put together a ticket within three or four ballots. Why should they tamely permit so-called "party leaders" to negate the whole primary season by "compromising" on a candidate who had not really competed — particularly when in Humphrey's case that could evoke memories of his route to the nomination in 1968?

Nothing, moreover, would more quickly split the Democratic Party than for supporters of the "new faces" to see the Humphrey phenomenon as just one more effort by old-line party leaders and labor bosses to hold on to power fairly lost to a new generation of Democrats.

Great Britain Faces Its Economic Snafu

LONDON — When President Ford was explaining to the leaders of the United States Conference of Mayors some weeks ago why he found the whole idea of federal financial aid for New York City so revolting, the horrible example he kept citing of a government that loses touch with economic reality and spends itself sick was Great Britain, with its Labor government and its welfare state.

Undoubtedly, there is plenty to worry about in Britain's current economic malaise, with unemployment at the highest level since World War II and still rising, the public sector deficit up by almost half over last year, many of the country's major enterprises near collapse and inflation an untamed chewer-up of family incomes. Yet a visitor to London still finds it possible to come away with considerable foundation for hope that, far from being ready for history's dust bin, Britain may be in process of charting some useful new directions for promoting industrial efficiency in an atmosphere of freedom.

The same union leaders who only a few months ago were pushing Britain toward economic suicide in the serene conviction that their members could always use their strike power to force up wages faster than living costs are now the most energetic crusaders for moderation on the pay front in line with Prime Minister Harold Wilson's anti-inflation program.

Luddite tendencies are too well and too widely established to justify optimism about their swift eradication, but there is growing recognition by both the Labor government and its union allies that companies with long records of sinking ever deeper into the red — often because of chronic strikes, overmanning and archaic work rules — will have to be allowed to go under. This represents a near-resolution as against the old tendency to infuse huge public subsidies into such enterprises in a vain effort to make them competitive and thus keep their workers employed.

The new emphasis is on encouraging private investment in profitable industries as a means of generating jobs, a tactic unionists on both sides of the Atlantic have often scorned as reflective of "trickle-down economics," more beneficial to the boss than to the workers.

The left wing of the Labor party, which last week strengthened its grip on the party machinery at the expense of the prime minister and his cabinet, is pushing for a program of forced investments by major exporting companies under planning agreements with the government. Wilson's chief economic adviser, Harold Lever, ridicules any such attempt to foster private enterprise through public coercion as a "contradiction in terms."

The only way to induce expanded investment in Britain's capital-starved industries, in Lever's estimation, is to enlist full union-management cooperation in removing roadblocks to efficiency. "Our real problem," he says, "is how to get the same intelligence applied to making our industries competitive — which means profitable — that the unions have shown in recognizing the self defeating character of the paper chase for more money in the pay packet."

Some approaches to that pivotal task may emerge at a meeting the prime minister plans to hold Nov. 5 at Chequers with his National Economic Development Council, made up of top representatives of industry, the unions and government. That session will try to chart strategies for industrial expansion and establish sub-councils to move forward with specific development plans in companies that can be winners, not losers.

"The first question our people ask," says one top union leader, "is: 'Get more efficient for what — so we can work ourselves out of a job'?" Formidable as is such rank-and-file resistance, the unions are doing more than act as missionaries for increased productivity. They are also holding their fire on demands for vastly expanded government spending to combat unemployment.

The unionists are, it is true, asking a high price in many respects for their hold-the-line posture on wages and budget-busting. They want selective import controls, a disastrous slide toward protectionism for this trading nation. They are also seeking to tip the balance in industrial relations through legal changes that would institutionalize the closed shop and give unions the upper hand in corporate control under the guise of "worker democracy."

The test of whether the weight of union effort will go toward Marxist gamesmanship or toward building on the start toward cooperation currently being made in wage restraint will probably not come until spring when the pinch of the pay policy begins to exert a perceptible squeeze on purchasing power.

But the extent to which leaders such as Jack Jones of the giant Transport and General Workers Union have put their necks on the line to make the policy succeed provides a basis for hope that Britain can pull itself out of its current despond especially if the government's somewhat extravagant expectations for North Sea oil materialize.

JOSEPH PLUMMER

What Is Giscard?

PARIS — Since the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt, American political analysts have fallen into the habit of appraising a new president's performance after his first 100 days in office. French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, in contrast, asked that he be judged by his first 500 days. That milestone having been reached, many Frenchmen and others are taking Giscard at his word.

Generally speaking, the French like what they see. In the most recent poll taken by the French Institute of Public Opinion, nearly 60% of the respondents said they approved of Giscard's performance.

A self-styled "liberal reformer," Giscard has concerned himself with matters of both style and substance. His substantive achievements include more permissive laws on abortion, divorce and contraception. As for stylistic changes, he has abolished the use of aristocratic titles in invitations issued by the Elysee Palace, dined with ordinary French families in their homes, and removed V-E day from the calendar of public events.

Giscard also is admired abroad. The Economist of London asserted that he has "one of the best brains in the Western world, one of the best minds in the financial and perhaps the political business too."

☆ ☆ ☆

And yet, in many ways, Giscard remains an enigma to his countrymen. Interior Minister Michel Poniatowski, one of Giscard's closest associates, expressed this view in a new book: "The many initiatives taken by Valery Giscard d'Estaing to simplify contacts between himself and citizens proceed from this insight: Everything should permit him to perceive from day to day the aspirations and problems of the French people. Elysee Palace, no longer sacrosanct, is no more an ivory tower, refuge of a mysterious and isolated power inherited from Louis XIV, Napoleon, and Charles de Gaulle."

But some political observers here argue that Giscard's conduct of the presidency does indeed have monarchical aspects. They note that the president is highly visible on ceremonial occasions, but virtually out of reach during moments of crisis, such as last year's postal strike. He tends to delegate distasteful political tasks to his ministers.

Sometimes, it would appear, Giscard tries to have it both ways. For example, when French prostitutes occupied churches last spring to protest police harassment, the president expressed sympathy for their plight. At the same time, the Special Minister on the Condition of Women, Francoise Giroud, refused to meet with the protesters. Interior Minister Poniatowski finally ordered police to send the women back into the streets.

Giscard's seeming duplicity led Bernard Chapuis of the Paris newspaper Le Monde to write the following rebuke: "The domain reserved to M. Giscard d'Estaing is liberalism. To his ministers he leaves the realism . . . (Thus he) assumes that role which in the past fell to the church: consoling people in the miseries of this world by announcing to them the ecstasies of the next. Giscardian liberalism is not the stick and the carrot; it is the stick and the crucifix."

Still, it is a brand of liberalism that commands substantial support among the French electorate. And Giscard's term of office has five and one-half years to run.

Sadat Wants PLO Part Of Geneva Peace Parley

WASHINGTON (AP) — Egypt's President Anwar Sadat called for a resumption of the Geneva peace conference with participation by the Palestine Liberation Organization "as an equal partner."

Sadat, at a news conference after a meeting with President Ford, said Tuesday it was up to the United States to "start the dialogue" with Yasir Arafat's group. He said he had urged this course on Ford.

Diplomatic sources said Egypt was sending formal notification to the United States and the Soviet Union, co-chairmen of the dormant peace conference. Israel has vowed never to negotiate with the PLO, while Washington has said it first must accept Israel's existence.

Sadat said he would not urge the PLO to recognize Israel and thereby meet American conditions. "I am not ready at all to put pressure on the Palestinians for the simple reason they are denied everything for 27 years," he said.

Diplomatic sources said it would take about two months to restart the conference if all sides approved. In the meantime, Sadat urged Ford to have Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger mediate another Israeli withdrawal on the Syrian front.

"As much as I know," he said, "the United States is ready to perform its good offices to fulfill such an agreement as this. And I am quite satisfied with the word of the United States."

Sadat said Kissinger "is quite ready and looking forward for the moment he can achieve a second disengagement agreement in the Golan Heights. He welcomed the idea."

As for Syria's President Hafez Assad, "If there is a reasonable proposal I think he will agree," Sadat said.

It was also learned that the administration has decided to ask Congress for $750 million in economic aid for Egypt. An additional $98.1 million for Egypt in farm commodities, under the Food for Peace Program, was announced by the Agriculture Department.

The decision to give Egypt $750 million in economic help more than doubles the current $300 million aid figure. At the same time, Sadat is seeking military commitments, perhaps up to $5 billion worth over 10 years.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen said the two presidents discussed both forms of aid and that the discussion was smooth, open and friendly.

At the same time, Nessen said Ford said deeply regrets New York Mayor Abraham Beame's refusal to welcome Sadat to the city on Wedner S Beame based his snub on Egyptian support for a U.N. resolution to condemn Zionism as racism.

Sadat met with Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger before going to the White House. At the State Department he was guest of honor at a luncheon given by Kissinger, who hailed him as "a good friend with whom we will work."

Overflowing Elevators Get Grain Car Priority

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered railroads serving six Midwest states to give priority in distributing empty railroad grain cars to elevators which are overflowing with corn and soybeans.

The ICC said the emergency order, which will be in effect until Nov. 14, was needed to alleviate grain car shortages.

It affects railroads that serve Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Iowa and Nebraska.

The order states that railroads in those states must give priority in distributing empty cars whenever elevator operators certify that corn and soybeans are stored on the ground near the elevator and are in serious danger of spoilage.

Senate Condemns Finding On Zionism

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate approved a resolution Tuesday that condemns a finding by a United Nations committee that "Zionism is a form of racism and race discrimination."

The resolution was approved by voice vote without dissent in the Senate just hours after it had been approved by the Foreign Relations Committee. Only about a dozen senators were on the floor at the time.

The resolution urges the United Nations General Assembly to reject the committee finding if it comes to a vote.

The Senate resolution was introduced Oct. 21 by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., and has since been cosponsored by 38 other senators. A similar resolution has more than 400 cosponsors in the House.

The U.N. resolution condemning Zionism was adopted 70 to 29 on Oct. 17 by the Social, Humanitarian and Cultural Committee of the U.N. General Assembly. It was promoted by Arab states and Communist-bloc countries.

The Senate resolution aproved by the committee for Senate floor action describes the U.N. committee resolution as a threat to the United Nations objective of promoting human rights and friendly relations among nations based on principles of equality and self-determination.

"Israel is not a racist state," Humphrey declared in introducing the resolution in the Senate. "To condemn Zionism is to condemn a central philosophical thrust in modern Jewish thought."

Disasters Visit Both Weddings

ELGIN, Ill. (AP) — William and Susan Backers' first marriage ceremony was so botched up they decided to tie the knot again, but it didn't go off too smoothly the second time, either.

In a private ceremony over the weekend, the bridegroom's mother was unable to attend. She was injured in a fall down stairs. A bridesmaid attended although she had been bedridden with pneumonia. The bride, expecting a child in May, came down with influenza after the ceremony.

But the photographer was there and got pictures of the ceremony in the church. One of the things that happened in the Backers' first wedding July 26 was that the photographer accidently exposed his film and ruined the pictures.

Other happenings then:

— The best man dropped out after an argument with the groom and a new one had to be named.

— The ring-bearers' parents, also after a dispute, dropped out and had to be replaced.

— The minister injured his neck in an auto accident and was barely able to perform the ceremony.

— The organist went on vacation and a new one had to be found at the last minute.

— The florist delivered flowers to the wrong address and half of them did not arrive the church until two hours after the ceremony.

— One of the bridemaids sneezed throughout the ceremony. She was allergic to the baby breath flowers in her corsage.

— At the reception the cake slid apart and fell on the floor.

Susan's mother, Mrs. Warren Roderick of Carpentersville, is looking forward to becoming a grandmother. But she said, "I hope Susan doesn't have babies like she has weddings."

Soldiers Deployed In Spanish Sahara

EL AAIUN, Spanish Sahara (AP) — Spain deployed soldiers throughout this North African colony Tuesday, imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew and disarmed native troops to prevent an uprising of Saharan nationalists.

Spanish officers reported armed anti-Moroccan tribesmen 20 miles from the border with Morocco, and said the tribesmen were closely linked to a Marxist group in El Aaiun opposed to any takeover by Morocco.

Government spokesmen expressed fears of "terrorist attacks," presumably by the Marxist Polisario front — backed by Algeria, which wants independence for the phosphate-rich Sahara.

At Tarfaya on the Moroccan side of the border, 150,000 Moroccan volunteers are camped in tents waiting to begin a march of conquest into the Sahara. More than double that number are to make the march.

Also camped at Tarfaya are members of a pro-Morocco organization of Saharans, the Front for Liberation and Unity (FLU), whose leaders said they knew of the tribe allied with the Polisario front.

"They are mostly young members of the tribe who caused trouble in school or college in Morocco and who are very political. We know that some of them are armed and have said they will fight to the last bullet against us, but they are only a tiny minority of the Sharan people," a FLU official said.

A blinding desert sandstorm swirled through the Tarfaya camps Tuesday causing discomfort and cutting off communications between the mass of volunteer marchers and the rest of Morocco.

The spokesman for the El Aaiun military commander said all Spanish civilians were ordered to leave the territory by Nov. 15.

All troops were placed on the alert Tuesday afternoon and ordered to occupy strategic points, not only in El Aaiun but throughout the desert territory, about the size of Colorado.

Only troops were allowed on the streets or outside their tents without special passes from the military commander.

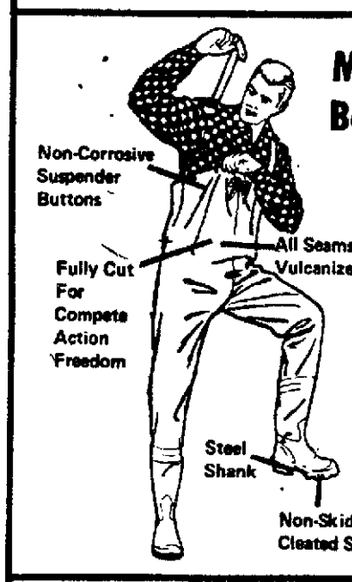

All families of military and civil personnel were ordered to gather in certain designated zones of El Aaiun.

Shortly before the start of the curfew, territorial police, troops of the Spanish Foreign Legion, paratroopers and marines swarmed out of their barracks to occupy the streets.

Anyone encountered was searched and ordered to take cover. Suspects were taken to police headquarters.

Disasters Visit Both Weddings

ELGIN, Ill. (AP) — William and Susan Backers' first marriage ceremony was so botched up they decided to tie the knot again, but it didn't go off too smoothly the second time, either.

In a private ceremony over the weekend, the bridegroom's mother was unable to attend. She was injured in a fall down stairs. A bridesmaid attended although she had been bedridden with pneumonia. The bride, expecting a child in May, came down with influenza after the ceremony.

But the photographer was there and got pictures of the ceremony in the church. One of the things that happened in the Backers' first wedding July 26 was that the photographer accidently exposed his film and ruined the pictures.

Other happenings then:

— The best man dropped out after an argument with the groom and a new one had to be named.

— The ring-bearers' parents, also after a dispute, dropped out and had to be replaced.

— The minister injured his neck in an auto accident and was barely able to perform the ceremony.

— The organist went on vacation and a new one had to be found at the last minute.

— The florist delivered flowers to the wrong address and half of them did not arrive the church until two hours after the ceremony.

— One of the bridemaids sneezed throughout the ceremony. She was allergic to the baby breath flowers in her corsage.

— At the reception the cake slid apart and fell on the floor.

Susan's mother, Mrs. Warren Roderick of Carpentersville, is looking forward to becoming a grandmother. But she said, "I hope Susan doesn't have babies like she has weddings."

Soldiers Deployed In Spanish Sahara

EL AAIUN, Spanish Sahara (AP) — Spain deployed soldiers throughout this North African colony Tuesday, imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew and disarmed native troops to prevent an uprising of Saharan nationalists.

Spanish officers reported armed anti-Moroccan tribesmen 20 miles from the border with Morocco, and said the tribesmen were closely linked to a Marxist group in El Aaiun opposed to any takeover by Morocco.

Government spokesmen expressed fears of "terrorist attacks," presumably by the Marxist Polisario front — backed by Algeria, which wants independence for the phosphate-rich Sahara.

At Tarfaya on the Moroccan side of the border, 150,000 Moroccan volunteers are camped in tents waiting to begin a march of conquest into the Sahara. More than double that number are to make the march.

Also camped at Tarfaya are members of a pro-Morocco organization of Saharans, the Front for Liberation and Unity (FLU), whose leaders said they knew of the tribe allied with the Polisario front.

"They are mostly young members of the tribe who caused trouble in school or college in Morocco and who are very political. We know that some of them are armed and have said they will fight to the last bullet against us, but they are only a tiny minority of the Sharan people," a FLU official said.

A blinding desert sandstorm swirled through the Tarfaya camps Tuesday causing discomfort and cutting off communications between the mass of volunteer marchers and the rest of Morocco.

The spokesman for the El Aaiun military commander said all Spanish civilians were ordered to leave the territory by Nov. 15.

All troops were placed on the alert Tuesday afternoon and ordered to occupy strategic points, not only in El Aaiun but throughout the desert territory, about the size of Colorado.

Only troops were allowed on the streets or outside their tents without special passes from the military commander.

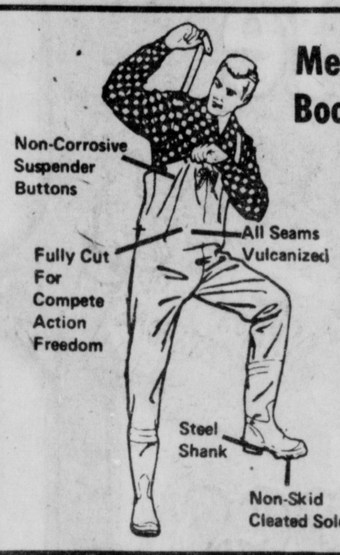

All families of military and civil personnel were ordered to gather in certain designated zones of El Aaiun.

Shortly before the start of the curfew, territorial police, troops of the Spanish Foreign Legion, paratroopers and marines swarmed out of their barracks to occupy the streets.

Anyone encountered was searched and ordered to take nover. Suspects were taken to police headquarters.

Dollar Stronger But Americans In Europe Don't Benefit

By FRED COLEMAN

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar has become stronger in Europe for the past six months, but Americans traveling or living here haven't yet benefitted because of inflation, an Associated Press survey shows.

American greenbacks now buy 10 to 15 per cent more in major European currencies than they did in March, meaning tourists and residents get more French francs, German marks and British pounds for dollars.

But because of inflation prices in Europe have often risen more sharply in the same period, so that at the end of the day Americans still end up paying more.

In Britain, for example, the American tourist can now buy 100 British pounds for $207. Back in March it would have cost him $243 for the same 100 pounds. So he saves $36. His problem starts when he goes out to spend the pounds in a country where the inflation rate is 26.9 per cent, the highest in the industrialized world.

(The current U.S. inflation rate is 7.8 per cent.)

A man's suit which would have cost an American 55 pounds in March in Britain now costs him 75 pounds. The extra 20 pounds works out to $40.14. In other words he saved $36 on the exchange rate but lost $40.14 on the price.

In other capitals, the story is much the same, whether the American is buying Swiss watches, French perfume or paying a hotel bill in Rome.

Americans working or living in Europe tended to get their pay adjusted as the dollar rate moved, the AP survey showed. When the dollar weakened, their allowances went up. When the dollar strengthened, the allowances were cut back. Americans interviewed in Europe said they ended up about the same.

In Italy, the dollar is worth about 11 per cent more this year, from 620 lira to as high as 690 lira but still behind the inflation rate of 12.7 per cent.

"Of course we are a little better off now," said an American living in Rome on a pension. "Americans living overseas get used to the fluctuations of the dollar. Sometimes you're hurt, sometimes you're helped."

The Swiss National Tourist Office said Americans spent 1.3 million nights in the country's hotels from January to August, a decline of 13.3 per cent from the same period last year.

The tourist office said that during this period the dollar rate against the Swiss franc improved by 10 per cent. A similar situation was reported by the British National Tourist office.

Americans on dollar salaries in Switzerland said the dollar improvement had been eaten up by a 5.7 per cent inflation.

What Dollar Does

London (AP) — The following shows how much Americans paid last March for 100 units of major European currencies and what they pay now:

Currency	March	October
British pounds	$243.00	207.00
W. German marks	44.00	39.00
Swiss francs	42.00	38.00
French francs	22.42	21.98
Italian lira	.15	.14

One U.S. foreign service employe in Geneva said the stronger dollar "obviously must have some effect." But asked whether he personally felt any, he replied, "No, I haven't really noticed any great difference."

In Paris, Alan Hott, whose travel agency specializes in American tourists, said bookings have improved this year as the dollar strengthened. He gave no specific figures but he said those tourists who do come "are certainly finding their dollar doesn't go as far as it used to, and are cutting down on their shohping in Paris."

American Express in Paris reported "a very good late season in September and October." But a spokesman there said it was not clear how much of this was influenced by the stronger dollar and how much by a desire to take advantage of lower off season rates.

Kelly Joyce, head of Cheese-Boro-Ponds in France, said the stronger dollar was a disadvantage to some American businessmen in France. Companies reporting home showed a better profit when the franc was stronger.

"The lower dollar meant increased apparent profits and some companies loosened up a bit, spending more on advertising for instance," Joyce said. "Now they have to cut back."

Joyce said most American executives in Paris were paid on split U.S.-French salaries which were adjusted once or twice a year as exchange rates fluctuated. He said he had "heard no great problems or the reverse."

In West Germany, American civilian and military employes now receive housing and cost of living benefits on a sliding scale in relation to the dollar's value.

"Our company makes an adjustment," an American housewife in Bonn said. "As the dollar goes up we get more deutsche mark buying power, but they cut my husband's pay." She said her budget remains the same. "If I need something, I buy it without thinking about the conversion rate," she added.

Anti-Staley Candidate Chosen By Dissidents

Des Moines (UPI) — A group of dissident National Farmers Organization members has chosen a candidate to oppose long-time NFO President Oren Lee Staley at the organization's convention this year.

A spokesman for the group would not name the candidate, saying the identity would be revealed at a meeting in Des Moines Saturday.

The dissident group, known as the "Committee for the Advancement of the NFO," was formed last summer in an effort to oust Staley. Staley has been president of the NFO, headquartered in Corning, Iowa, for nearly 20 years.

The NFO's convention is scheduled for Dec. 10-12 in Kansas City, Mo. Staley has survived numerous challenges at previous conventions.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's trade surplus totaled $976 million in September despite an upswing in oil imports, the government said Tuesday.

The September balance was the lowest since the United States registered a $557 m llion trade surplus in April. The August trade balance was $1.04 billion.

The surplus marked the eighth straight month that the value of exports has exceeded the value of imports. The trade balance so far this year is $8.4 billion in the black, compared to a $1.8 billion deficit during the first nine months of 1974.

The government also reported that investments by foreigners in the United States totaled $103.7 billion in 1974, much higher than previouslv estimated.

However, the Commerce and Treasury departments said Middle East oil-producing nations accounted for only a very small part of the total foreign investment.

The largest investors were from the United Kingdom, Canada, the Netherlands and Switzerland, along with substantial investment from Germany, France, Belgium, Luxembourg and Japan, the department said.

The September trade surplus was sustained with the help of a $112.5 million jump in wheat exports. The Soviet Union accounted for 20 per cent of that, according to Commerce Department analysts, but European countries were the biggest buyers during the month.

Exports of civilian aircraft rose $32.7 million. Chemical exports were up $21 million.

Imports items showing large gains were sugar, $144.2 million; coffee, $71.4 million and nonferrous metals, $45.4 million.

But it was the $328.6 million jump, after adjustment for seasonal factors, in imports of petroleum and petroleum products that was the major influence behind the 1.9 per cent increase in total imports.

Petroleum is expected to account for about a quarter of tte value of U.S. imports this year and has become a crucial factor in determining whether the nation runs a surplus or a deficit in its trade accounts.

With demand for petroleum low during the past 18 months due to slack production by U.S. factories, relatively steady demand for U.S. goods overseas kept the trade accounts in surplus and thus cushioned the impact of the recession on U.S. workers.

Analysts have generally expected that recovery from the slump would eventually stimulate demand for imported oil and swing the trade accounts back toward deficit. But there was no clear sign that the lastest trend in oil imports represents the start of that process.

The exporting countries have slated a price increase of about 10 per cent for Nov. 1, and there are indications that domestic users and refiners are stocking up now on cheaper oil.

"It's kind of hopeless to untangle that in any sure way," said Derek Hargreaves, a trade analyst with Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York.

Government analysts agreed that so many factors are involved that a clear picture of the nation's appetite for imported oil is difficult to draw.

With total imports so far this year running 1.9 per cent below last year's recession level for the same period, analysts suggested that conservation efforts might be having a significant impact on imports, although such conclusions must still be tentative.

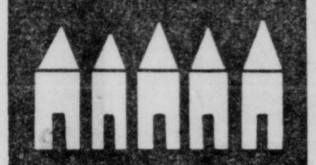

Import figures more up-to-date than the Commerce statistics presented a mixed indication of future trends.

The American Petroleum Institute said imports for the four-week period ended in mid-October totaled 6.26 million barrels a day, compared with imports of 6.1 million a day in m d-September.

The Federal Energy Administration, which logs oil imports at the time they are loaded on ships, said September oil imports totaled 204 million barrels, a drop of 1 million barrels from the previous month.

FEA figures on apparent demand for both imported and domestic petroleum dropped to an average of 15.7 million barrels a day in September, the lowest level since March.

Dollar Stronger But Americans In Europe Don't Benefit

By FRED COLEMAN

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar has become stronger in Europe for the past six months, but Americans traveling or living here haven't yet benefitted because of inflation, an Associated Press survey shows.

American greenbacks now buy 10 to 15 per cent more in major European currencies than they did in March, meaning tourists and residents get more French francs, German marks and British pounds for dollars.

But because of inflation prices in Europe have often risen more sharply in the same period, so that at the end of the day Americans still end up paying more.

In Britain, for example, the American tourist can now buy 100 British pounds for $207. Back in March it would have cost him $243 for the same 100 pounds. So he saves $36. His problem starts when he goes out to spend the pounds in a country where the inflation rate is 26 9 per cent, the highest in the industrialized world.

(The current U.S. inflation rate is 7.8 per cent.)

A man's suit which would have cost an American 55 pounds in March in Britain now costs him 75 pounds. The extra 20 pounds works out to $40.14. In other words he saved $36 on the exchange rate but lost $40.14 on the price.

In other capitals, the story is much the same, whether the American is buying Swiss watches, French perfume or paying a hotel bill in Rome.

Americans working or living in Europe tended to get their pay adjusted as the dollar rate moved, the AP survey showed. When the dollar weakened, their allowances went up. When the dollar strengthened, the allowances were cut back. Americans interviewed in Europe said they ended up about the same.

In Italy, the dollar is worth about 11 per cent more this year, from 620 lira to as high as 690 lira but still behind the inflation rate of 12.7 per cent.

"Of course we are a little better off now," said an American living in Rome on a pension. "Americans living overseas get used to the fluctuations of the dollar. Sometimes you're hurt, sometimes you're helped."

The Swiss National Tourist Office said Americans spent 1.3 million nights in the country's hotels from January to August, a decline of 13 3 per cent from the same period last year.

The tourist office said that during this period the dollar rate against the Swiss franc improved by 10 per cent. A similar situation was reported by the British National Tourist office.

Americans on dollar salaries in Switzerland said the dollar improvement had been eaten up by a 5 7 per cent inflation.

What Dollar Does

London (AP) — The following shows how much Americans paid last March for 100 units of major European currencies and what they pay now:

Currency	March	October
British pounds	$243.00	207.00
W. German marks	44.00	39.00
Swiss francs	42.00	38.00
French francs	22.42	21.98
Italian lira	.15	.14

One U.S. foreign service employe in Geneva said the stronger dollar "obviously must have some effect." But asked whether he personally felt any, he replied, "No, I haven't really noticed any great difference."

In Paris, Alan Hott, whose travel agency specializes in American tourists, said bookings have improved this year as the dollar strengthened. He gave no specific figures but he said those tourists who do come "are certainly finding their dollar doesn't go as far as it used to, and are cutting down on their shohping in Paris."

American Express in Paris reported "a very good late season in September and October." But a spokesman there said it was not clear how much of this was influenced by the stronger dollar and how much by a desire to take advantage of lower off season rates.

Kelly Joyce, head of Cheese-Boro-Ponds in France, said the stronger dollar was a disadvantage to some American businessmen in France. Companies reporting home showed a better profit when the franc was stronger.

"The lower dollar meant increased apparent profits and some companies loosened up a bit, spending more on advertising for instance," Joyce said. "Now they have to cut back."

Joyce said most American executives in Paris were paid on split U.S.-French salaries which were adjusted once or twice a year as exchange rates fluctuated. He said he had "heard no great problems or the reverse."

In West Germany, American civilian and military employes now receive housing and cost of living benefits on a sliding scale in relation to the dollar's value.

"Our company makes an adjustment," an American housewife in Bonn said. "As the dollar goes up we get more deutsche mark buying power, but they cut my husband's pay." She said her budget remains the same. "If I need something, I buy it without thinking about the conversion rate," she added.

Anti-Staley Candidate Chosen By Dissidents

Des Moines (UPI) — A group of dissident National Farmers Organization members has chosen a candidate to oppose long-time NFO President Oren Lee Staley at the organization's convention this year.

A spokesman for the group would not name the candidate, saying the identity would be revealed at a meeting in Des Moines Saturday.

The dissident group, known as the "Committee for the Advancement of the NFO," was formed last summer in an effort to oust Staley. Staley has been president of the NFO, headquartered in Corning, Iowa, for nearly 20 years.

The NFO's convention is scheduled for Dec. 10-12 in Kansas City, Mo. Staley has survived numerous challenges at previous conventions.

Cargo Ship Plans Sold To Russians

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government authorized a private firm to sell Russia plans for a sophisticated new nargo ship for $1 million, even though the United States contributed over $57 million to design and build the vessel, investigators reported Tuesday.

The Senate's permanent investigations subcommittee report said the Lykes Brothers Steamship Co. of New Orleans later tried to charge the U.S. Navy $2 million for the same plans.

The U.S. Maritime Administration issued the license which permitted the company to export the design data on two Lykes-SEABEE ships to the Soviets.

The SEABEE design incorporates twin hydraulic stern elevators to load or unload full cargo barges. Once loaded the barges are stored inside the ship until the vessel reaches its destination. The barges then are refloated.

The Maritime Administration told the Navy in April 1973 that it supported Lykes' "flat refusal" to give the plans to the Navy, which claimed it was entitled to them because of the government's investment in the vessel's creation.

Committee investigators said Maritime Administration officials have since reversed their decision.

The investigators accused the firm of a "self-interested disregard" of legal requirements and the nation's need to improve its merchant fleet.

"The United States, a major commercial power with a broad range of maritime interests, has been hard pressed to maintain its position in world shipping," the report said. "The episodes described in this report suggest that the difficulties may be compounded by inadequate management of both federal subsidy programs and technology transfer procedures."

Two sets of plans were sold to the Soviets for $500,000 each. The plans were developed during the construction of three ships for Lykes Brothers under a construction subsidy contract with General Dynamics.

The Maritime Administration contributed $519,168 to the preliminary design work and later paid General Dynamics more than $57 million in subsidy for more thanhalf the total construction cost, the report said.

The government received nothing from the proceeds of the sale to the Soviet government even though it had a proprietary interest in the design data because of the subsidies, the report said.

The report said the Maritime Administration approved the sale because the plans were published in technical publications and the ships could be seen in many world ports, the report said.

"Whatever the public availability of the designs, the Soviets must have considered them sufficiently inaccessible—or surely they would not have paid $1 million in order to obtain them," the report said.

You Hold Each Other In Dancing The Hustle

New York (AP) — Everybody's doing the hustle. How about you?

Dancers shift their torsos swiftly and gracefully from side to side and back and forth while their feet tap out intricate steps. For the first time in a long time, it's a popular dance in which partners hold each other.

From Studio One in Los Angeles to the Library in Atlanta to Leviticus in New York, discotheque enthusiasts have moved away from "hang loose" dances such as the bump, penguin, boogaloo, watergate and robot to the highly stylized, sexy and more sophisticated hustle.

The dance has become so popular that variations are blooming. Disco dancers are doing the simple Brooklyn hustle, the funkier New York hustle and the samba-like Latin hustle, perhaps the most popular of all. The step also has evolved into new dances such as the rope and the sidestep.

For the uninitiated, here's how to do the hustle (these are directions for a woman; men should reverse the procedure):

Begin by facing your partner. Hold your partner in the traditional, ballroom dancing position. Feet are together.

Tap the right foot to the right. For this maneuver, you can raise your right foot off the ground and move it slightly to right for the tap or you can slide it to the right and tap.

Repeat entire sequence, and you're doing the hustle.

As you move your feet to the beat of the music, your body will automatically sway from side to side, especially as you get a feel for the rhythm and watch others do it.

The sensual, torso turning dance is even attracting middle-aged Americans, perhaps because the dance employes the ballroom dancing position used for fox trots and waltzes.

Roseland in New York, that musty bastion of ballroom dancing, offers a hustle contest every Wednesday night. Dale, Arthur Murray and Fred Astaire dance studios now offer hustle classes.

The creation of of the dance had a lot to do with the rapid development of discotheques and the disco sound, according to William Pinzone, disc jockey at Friends in New York.

"Black kids and Latin kids began going to discotheques and began to blend their dance styles with the other disco crowds," he said. "The Latin kids listened to the disco music and interpreted it with their native rhythms and steps — the Latin hustle."

Then Van McCoy's album "Disco Baby" began to soar on the charts with its hit single, "The Hustle." Hubert Laws, Herbie Mann, Quincey Jones, Esther Phillips, the Philadelphia Sound and Loggins and Messina also permeated the disco market with their hustle sounds.

"It's a dance that allows people to show their dancing skills," Pinzone said. "It still hasn't reached its peak because there are still more and more people who want to learn how to do it."

Early Backer Of Busing Joins Politicians In Urging It Be Ended

WASHINGTON (AP) — A leading sociologist joined Kentucky political leaders Tuesday in calling for an end to compulsory busing as a means of achieving school desegregation.

Sociologist James S. Coleman of the University of Chicago, an early backer of cross-busing of school children, told the Senate Judiciary Committee he now believes that busing has hampered more than helped the cause of school integration.

Claiming busing raises "a spectre of a country of black cities and white suburbs," Coleman said he supports a moratorium on all busing and the creation of a presidential commission to study the impact of busing across the nation.

But Coleman disagreed with Kentucky Gov. Julian M. Carroll and Kentucky senstors and congressmen who urged that the Constitution be amended to bar court-ordered busing plans like those now in effect in Louisville and Boston.

The Judiciary Committee is holding hearings on four proposed constitutional amendments that would prohibit busing of students beyond the nearest school.

Committee Chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., said the two days of hearings are centering on the Louisville-Jefferson County busing plan as a "test case" study of a community "marred by strife" because of court-ordered busing.

A report by Coleman in 1966 for the U.S. Office of Education supported busing to achieve desegration. The report found that children from disadvantaged backgrounds performed somewhat better when they attended school with children from more affluent homes.

Coleman testified that when he conducted that study, he never envisioned massive court-ordered busing of students or the impact it would have on U.S. cities.

The results of such orders have been counterproductive, he said, increasing racial tensions and contributing to the flight of whites from cities to surrounding suburbs.

But he said a constitutional amendment is the wrong way to go about ending busing. "I don't see the Constitution as an instrument that should be used for a matter of this sort," he testified.

Instead, he said he hopes that the federal courts get the message that busing hasn't worked and cease issuing busing orders. He said he remains puzzled over why the Supreme Court hasn't already handed down a major antibusing decision.

In the meantime, Coleman said a presidential commission to study busing — with a moratorium on busing plans while the commission does its work — would be "a very useful thing for this country."

Carroll said he sees a moratorium and a study commission as a good way to immediately offer relief to communities torn by forced busing.

But he also endorsed an amendment to the Constitution as the most effective long-term remedy.

Such an amendment "will unequivocally eliminate court-ordered busing," the governor said.

Such a process would require two-thirds approval by both House and Senate and ratification by three-fourths of the state legislatures, a procedure that could take a number of years.

Both the House and Senate recently have passed antibusing measures but none have been enacted into law. They would not affect court-ordered busing plans.

The Judiciary Committee held hearings in past Congresses on proposed antibusing amendments to the Constitution, but never approved any of the proposals.

The committee itself is regarded as closely divided on the issue. If past Senate votes are any indication, the chances of a proposed constitutional amendment mustering the needed two-thirds vote in the Senate seems slight.

Also testifying before the panel to urge adoption of one of the proposed amemdments were Sens. Wendell H. Ford and Walter D. Huddleston, both Kentucky Democrats, two Kentucky congressmen, a number of antibusing senators from other states and a variety of citizen witnesses from Kentucky.

U.S. Judge Reaffirms Order For Ford To Give Statement

Sacramento, Calif. (AP) — A federal judge reaffirmed Tuesday his order that President Ford give a videotape statement in the trial of Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme.

U.S. District Court Judge Thomas MacBride said the videotape statement probably could be taken within an hour during a visit the President will make this week to California. Prosecutors had asked that the order be rescinded.

The 27-year-old Miss Fromme is charged with attempting to murder him as he walked through Capitol Park here Sept. 5. Her lawyers want Ford to counter testimony that a click was heard when she pointed a gun at him.

Earlier Tuesday in San Francisco, another federal judge entered an innocent plea for Sara Jane Moore, charged with trying to kill President Ford, despite her attorney's strong objections.

In San Francisco, Chief Public Defender James Hewitt, in a 15-minute arraignment marked by a sharp exchange with the judge, repeatedly insisted no plea be entered until psychiatric tests are completed to determine whether Mrs. Moore is competent to stand trial.

But U.S. District Court Judge Samuel Conti, citing requirements of the 1974 Speedy Trial Act, swept aside all objections. He said the trial would begin as scheduled unless she were found mentally incompetent.

Conti later agreed to Hewitt's request that Mrs. Moore, 45, be allowed to attend a closed juvenile court custody hearing in San Francisco Thursday concerning her 10-year-old son, Frederick Aalberg. He is currently living in a foster home in the Bay area with a friend of his mother's.

Mrs. Moore, who told police after her arrest she was worried about being late to pick up her son from school, will then be returned to San Diego to complete her psychiatric tests.

In arguing against the Dec. 15 trial date for Mrs. Moore, Hewitt told Judge Conti: "I cannot prepare this case in 90 days."

Snapped the judge, "You're going to prepare the case within 90 days. If you have any argument, give it to Congress."

The Speedy Trial Act went into effect Sept. 29, seven days after the divorcee allegedly fired a shot at Ford outside a San Francisco hotel. The law requires that for a person held without bond a trial must begin within 90 days after arrest.

Judge Conti set Nov. 17 for a competency hearing which he said will include appearances by three psychiatrists who have been examining Mrs. Moore at the San Diego Metropolitan Correctional Center. Conti said he expected to have the test results by Nov. 11.

The indictment against Mrs. Moore was disclosed by Conti on Friday. It had been sealed at the request of Chief Asst. U.S. Atty. F. Steele Langford, who said the judge decided to start proceedings immediately because of the new law.

Mrs. Moore was brought to the San Mateo County Jail in Redwood City last Saturday, where she was lodged in a maximum security cell a few feet from newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst.

Hewitt told Conti he hadn't been able to discuss the case with Mrs. Moore because of the psychiatric examination. Hewitt claimed the new law provided for exclusion from the 90-day limit of time spent during such testing.

The judge turned down the delay request, then called Mrs. Moore before the bench for arraignment and entering of a plea.

When the clerk asked if Mrs. Moore and her attorney would waive reading of the full indictment, Hewitt replied: "We will not."

Mrs. Moore was asked to enter a plea, and Hewitt responded: "We are not prepared to enter a plea at this time."

Conti then said, "The court will then enter a plea of not guilty for Mrs. Moore" and set the trial date.

Walter D. Herrick, public defender for the county juvenile division, said the confidential custody hearing was to decide "where should the child be and under what circumstances should he live." He said there would be no discussion of Mrs. Moore's case at the hearing.

U.S. Judge Reaffirms Order For Ford To Give Statement

Sacramento, Calif. (AP) — A federal judge reaffirmed Tuesday his order that President Ford give a videotape statement in the trial of Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme.

U.S. District Court Judge Thomas MacBride said the videotape statement probably could be taken within an hour during a visit the President will make this week to California. Prosecutors had asked that the order be rescinded.

The 27-year-old Miss Fromme is charged with attempting to murder him as he walked through Capitol Park here Sept. 5. Her lawyers want Ford to counter testimony that a click was heard when she pointed a gun at him.

Mrs. Moore, who told police after her arrest she was worried about being late to pick up her son from school, will then be returned to San Diego to complete her psychiatric tests.

In arguing against the Dec. 15 trial date for Mrs. Moore, Hewitt told Judge Conti: "I cannot prepare this case in 90 days."

Mrs. Moore was asked to enter a plea, and Hewitt responded: "We are not prepared to enter a plea at this time."

Conti then said, "The court will then enter a plea of not guilty for Mrs. Moore" and set the trial date.

Walter D. Herrick, public defender for the county juvenile division, said the confidential custody hearing was to decide "where should the child be and under what circumstances should he live." He said there would be no discussion of Mrs. Moore's case at the hearing.

'The Money Is Not There'

. . . Says N.Y. Agency

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City's fiscal rescue agency said Tuesday "the money is not there" to stave off default beyond Nov. 14, but expressed belief funds would become available.

At the same time, Sen. James L. Buckley, R-Con.-N.Y., said President Ford would submit legislation to deal with the city's crisis to Congress on Wednesday.

A spokesman for a leading bank called the city's financial position "dire" after the Municipal Assistance Corp. said sufficient funds were not now available to prevent the city from defaulting on its debts.

Buckley said President Ford did not disclose his proposals, but one high administration official said his legislative package would deal with revision of federal bankruptcy laws.

The official said current laws do not address themselves to the problems of municipal bankruptcies. Ford's proposals presumably would set priorities for municipal spending in the event of default, permitting cities to continue essential service and pay off other debts under a plan that would require the approval of a judge, he said.

Ford does not believe New York City's default is inevitable, the official said.

Ford's plans will be spelled out when he address a National Press Club luncheon at noon Wednesday. But one administration official warned "don't expect any bombshells," adding the address would be an overview of the financial plight facing New York City.

Buckley made his comments after he and representatives of 11 New York City public safety unions met for more than an hour with Ford in the White House.

They urged Ford to make certain essential services be continued in the city in the event of default.

A representative for New York firemen said union leaders came away from the meeting with hope Ford would not permit such basic services as fire and police protection to end.

"The President did express a vital concern for the people of New York and he is well aware of the problems of civil unrest that could develop in case of default," the union representative said.

At the same time, New York Gov. Hugh Carey asked the governors of the other 49 states to urge their congressional delegations to vote to help New York City.

"The taxpayers of your state may very well end up paying New York City's police, firemen and welfare recipients if the city is allowed to default," Carey said in letters to the governors.

The date of default, unless some sort of federal aid appeared, previously was given as Dec. 1. This, however, was contingent on a complicated system of state and private loans totaling $750 million.

The overall plan calls for $2.3 billion and the Emergency Financial Control Board, a state agency set up to oversee city spending, says $6 billion in federal guarantees is needed above that.

The $2. billion was predicated upon the state selling $750 million worth of notes the proceeds of which would then be used to buy Big Mac bonds. Big Mac proceeds are allocated to the city.

The state, however, found no market for the notes and so far has had to tap pension funds for the money to buy the bonds.

State Comptroller Arthur Levitt has so far not provided the remaining $150 million and this has led to the new crisis.

Congress, debating aid plans, has been using Dec. 1 as the deadline to avoid a financial crisis which this city's top bankers say would spread throughout the country.

The $750 million is still $150 million short, primarily because the bond markets are now closed to the state as well as the city, a spokesman for the Municipal Assistance Corp. said.

Although unable to sell notes to channel funds to the city, "somehow the state has to find that dough," he said.

He predicted that, once again, Levitt will tap pension funds he controls and use them to buy $150 million worth of Big Mac bonds to get the city through its unexpected new crisis.

The state has already met $600 million of its commitment to save the city through pension fund purchases.

State officials, the spokesman said, have indicated that there is $100 million more available, but that still leaves $150 million.

"The state has the commitment," he said.

The city's crisis, meanwhile, spilled over into suburban Yonkers where the city of more than 100,000 may have to default on its obligations next month.

City Manager J. Emmett Casey said Yonkers was in better fiscal shape than it had been in years but found bond markets closed because bankers "have painted Yonkers with the same brush as New York City."

Meanwhile, the Senate Banking Committee set a deadline of noon Thursday for deciding whether to recommend legislation to help New York. The committe, considering a proposal for $6 billion in federal loan guarantees, said it was postponing any decision for 48 hours to allow Republicans to prepare amendments and to hear Ford's address.

Sen. Adlai Stevenson III, D-Ill., a key committee member, proposed an alternative: a total of $11.5 billion in loan guarantees over a four-year period, restructuring New York City's debt and reducing the cost of employe pension plans. In addition, his proposal would permit investors to exchange short-term city notes for long-term notes and would guarantee essential services in the event of default.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, noting "some think default is necessary as a discipline," said bankrupty laws should be amended to accommodate a New York default and predicted this tactic could be approved by Congress faster than an aid bill.

A banking source said the city's major banks have analyzed various plans put forth in Congress to stave off default. He said the banks do not object to postponing collection of the debt they hold nor to reducing interest rates on what they have.

However, the banks would not agree to purchase a billion or more dollars worth of new city securities, he said.

Group OKs Extending Tax Cut For Business

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Ways and Means Committee voted Tuesday to extend a $3 billion plus annual tax cut for business through 1980.

President Ford's proposal for making it permanent was rejected by the committee, 16 to 6.

The committee approved the temporary extension on a 25-9 vote.

The tax reduction for business was part of the law that went into effect last March to reduce taxes and stimulate economic recovery. The committee already has approved a plan for extending personal tax cuts, amounting to $12.7 billion, into 1976.

The 1975 law cut business taxes $3.3 billion for 1975 and $3.3 billion for 1976 by increasing the investment tax credit to 10 per cent for all firms.

This lets firms subtract directly from taxes owed to the government a part of their investment in machinery and equipment. Previously the credit had been 7 per cent for businesses generally and 4 per cent for public utilities.

The committee agreed to extend the 10 per cent tax credit for these years at this annual cost to the Treasury: for 1977 at $3.3 billion, for 1978 at $3.4 billion, for 1979 at $3.6 billion, and for 1980 at $3.7 billion.

The 1975 tax law also provided for 1975 and for 1976 that this investment tax credit could be 11 per cent in cases where this extra one percentage point is used to buy a company's common stock for the benefit of the workers. This is called an employe stock ownership plan.

President Ford's proposed business tax cut package did not include this extra one percentage point system. By voice vote Tuesday, the committee rejected a Republican attempt to include this feature in the panel's plan for extending business tax reductions.

In other action, the committee rejected, by 14 to 11, a dividend reinvestment feature of Ford's total $569 million package proposal for special tax relief for electric utilities.

Fugitive's Plush Plane Auctioned Off

Newark, N.J. (UPI) — Fugitive financier Robert Vesco's Boeing 707 jetliner — equipped with a sauna, dance floor and three bathrooms — was sold to Pan American World Airways for $650,000.

The plane was auctioned off at Newark International Airport by attorney John J. McLaughlin, the receiver for Fairfield General Inc., an Essex County firm allegedly looted by Vesco before he fled the United States.

The plane, which also is equipped with a wine cellar, was leased to Fairfield by Pan Am, which held a $750,000 mortgage on the jet.

'The Money Is Not There'

. . . Says N.Y. Agency

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City's fiscal rescue agency said Tuesday "the money is not there" to stave off default beyond Nov. 14, but expressed belief funds would become available.

At the same time, Sen. James L. Buckley, R-Con.-N.Y., said President Ford would submit legislation to deal with the city's crisis to Congress on Wednesday.

A spokesman for a leading bank called the city's financial position "dire" after the Municipal Assistance Corp. said sufficient funds were not now available to prevent the city from defaulting on its debts.

Buckley said President Ford did not disclose his proposals, but one high administration official said his legislative package would deal with revision of federal bankruptcy laws.

The official said current laws do not address themselves to the problems of municipal bankruptcies. Ford's proposals presumably would set priorities for municipal spending in the event of default, permitting cities to continue essential service and pay off other debts under a plan that would require the approval of a judge, he said.

Ford does not believe New York City's default is inevitable, the official said.

Ford's plans will be spelled out when he address a National Press Club luncheon at noon Wednesday. But one administration official warned "don't expect any bombshells," adding the address would be an overview of the financial plight facing New York City.

Buckley made his comments after he and representatives of 11 New York City public safety unions met for more than an hour with Ford in the White House.

They urged Ford to make certain essential services be continued in the city in the event of default.

A representative for New York firemen said union leaders came away from the meeting with hope Ford would not permit such basic services as fire and police protection to end.

"The President did express a vital concern for the people of New York and he is well aware of the problems of civil unrest that could develop in case of default," the union representative said.

At the same time, New York Gov. Hugh Carey asked the governors of the other 49 states to urge their congressional delegations to vote to help New York City.

"The taxpayers of your state may very well end up paying New York City's police, firemen and welfare recipients if the city is allowed to default," Carey said in letters to the governors.

The date of default, unless some sort of federal aid appeared, previously was given as Dec. 1. This, however, was contingent on a complicated system of state and private loans totaling $750 million.

The overall plan calls for $2.3 billion and the Emergency Financial Control Board, a state agency set up to oversee city spending, says $6 billion in federal guarantees is needed above that.

The state has already met $600 million of its commitment to save the city through pension fund purchases.

State officials, the spokesman said, have indicated that there is $100 million more available, but that still leaves $150 million.

"The state has the commitment," he said.

The city's crisis, meanwhile, spilled over into suburban Yonkers where the city of more than 100,000 may have to default on its obligations next month.

HEALTH TIP

FROM THE NEBRASKA MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Do you have muscle?

You bet you do, says the Nebraska Medical Association.

The human body has more than 600 muscles scattered through the body. Each bit of muscle is made of a bundle of fibers. Each fiber is about the size of a human hair, but it can support one thousand times its own weight.

The body has three kinds of muscle. One is called the striped muscle, because it has dark and light bands across the fibers. It is often referred to as skeletal muscle, because it is attached to some part of the skeleton. Striped muscle is voluntary, because the body has some control over it when it is used to throw a ball or walk-up a hill.

Smooth or involuntary muscles handle all the work of the internal organs, except the heart. This includes the stomach and intestines.

The cardiac muscle is the third kind, an involuntary muscle joined in a continuous network.

When a muscle contracts, it becomes shorter and thicker. Vigorous exercise sometimes causes a muscle to cramp. It usually can be relaxed by working the limb or rubbing the muscle.

The Nebraska Medical Association says physical training can increase the size of the skeletal muscles, and lack of exercise can result in muscles decreasing in size. A benefit of physical training is improvement in muscular coordination which reduces effort in work or athletics.

Snorer Is Noisy Breather

By George C. Thosteson, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have been having this problem of snoring. I am a female of 23. I snore quite loudly, even when I sleep on my side, and I'm quite embarrassed when we have company overnight.

It seems to get louder, and my brother says that every night I get a different tune. What, if anything, can be done? — Miss P.A.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I am a restless wife from lack of sleep. At night my husband snores. He chews and grunts, and I lose sleep. He won't see a doctor. This just started a few years ago. Any suggestions? — Mrs. N. H.

Snoring is noisy breathing. Snorers are usually mouth-breathers, at least during sleeping hours, and the sound is caused by air rushing in through the mouth causing the soft palate to vibrate. Children with large tonsils or adenoids will snore, and obese persons are apt to be noisy breathers.

It can be reduced (although apparently not in the case of the young woman) by avoiding the on-the-back sleeping position, which tends to allow the mouth to hang open, encouraging mouth breathing.

Mrs. N. H. may be wise in trying to get her husband to a doctor. Snoring can be indicative of a disorder of the air passage, polyps in the nasal cavity, for example. A bent nasal septum, too, can cause the person to snore. It can also be allergy-related. An allergy can cause swelling of the nasal membrane, creating an obstruction. Pillow down is a common offender in this. This would apply to the young lady snorer, too.

Snoring comes with a relaxed state, and is often a resulting factor of just how fatigued the snorer is on retiring. Some persons, who rarely snore otherwise, become window-rattlers after falling into a deep sleep in an over-fatigued state. So degrees of tiredness may account for the "variations on the theme" presented by Miss P.A.

We do tend to snore increasingly with age, also. This is thought to be caused in some by loss of muscle tone of the soft palate. Snoring is harmless to the "performer," mighty troublesome to the "audience." Except where it is symptomatic of an underlying ailment, it is not a serious thing.

All sorts of ingenious gadgets have been devised to reduce snoring, including clamps to keep the mouth closed. In situations where the snoring threatens to destroy a marriage, such gadgets might be considered. I've known persons to place stones in the bed beside them at night to discourage turning over onto the back.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: The heels of my feet have constant pain. Naturally, at night I notice the pain more since my mind isn't busy as it is in the daytime.

Is it gout, arthritis, and why in my heels? Or is it poor circulation? My doctor has given me medication, but it hasn't helped much. — Mrs. P. H.

Could be gout. But it would require an X-ray of the heel and blood tests for uric acid to determine that.

The most likely cause is bursitis of the heel. Warm foot baths before retiring and rubber padding in the heels of your shoes should help. If you've put on considerable weight recently, this could be a contributing cause.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Is it true that a person can get the mumps over and over again until they have affected both sides, after which you can't catch them again? — Mrs. R. E.M.

One attack of mumps usually confers immunity for life, but second attacks may occur in from 7 to 10% of cases.

Most cases involve children from 5 to 15 years old. Often, when it is found in males past puberty, there is about a 25% chance of orchitis (testicular complications) occurring.

Ed Board May Inherit Problem

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

The Legislature "would hand the cash flow problem over to us" by having the state treasurer decide monthly how much school districts will receive in general fund payments, the Lincoln Board of Education was told Tuesday evening.

However, under Gov. J. James Exon's proposals in the special legislative session underway, state aid to schools and special education funds would be exempted from any budget rollbacks, Joseph P. Rowson pointed out.

Rowson, Lincoln Public Schools lobbyist and administrative assistant for publications and information, told board members he believes "we'll see a mix" of state administrative cash flow controls coupled with budget cuts.

Supt John Prasch said State Education Commissioner Anne Campbell is analyzing when school districts reach a low point in funds, so that any paring would not seriously jeopardize their financial stability.

"I think we're vulnerable at two points," Prasch said. One is if general fund (state tax) payments to local districts were made differently, altering budget plans in the face of standing commitments. The other is apportionment from state-owned school lands, double the amount expected.

The Lincoln board will make no formal statement at legislative committee hearings during the special session recess until Nov. 3.

In the 1976 Legislature, Prasch said he's sure services to the handicapped in community-based vs. institutional-based programs, plus settling financing of those in schools, "will be a big issue."

Having just returned from a national meeting of superintendents from cities the size of Lincoln, Prasch said school districts everywhere face "very severe" fiscal pressures. Some are confronted with "wholesale staffing cuts."

'Not Unusual'

Thus, Nebraska's state cash flow depletion with the prospect of higher taxes is "not unusual," and he said "the problem of serving handicapped children is a national concern."

In a matter of local concern, some West Lincoln School parents attended the meeting to request the board to speed up plans for an addition, to relieve overcrowding.

One parent said the elementary student enrolment there is "26% more than we should have," according to school maximums. The total, 679, includes grades 1-5.

President Louis Roper said the board will sign an agreement with an architect this week, and that "educational specifications for the addition have been developed."

Prasch explained again that the shrinking district building fund will not allow West Lincoln construction to start until at least 1976, and the addition could be ready in 1977.

In a report on school staff to students ratios, Prasch said each school building has enough professionals, associate teachers, aides, specialists and others "to have groupings of youngsters below 30 in every case."

Methods to calculate the ratio vary, from the number of teachers per student, to including some or all staff members in a building (such as specialists or clerical employes).

The range in elementary schools is 16.3 students in an all-staff ratio to a high of 29.1 per teacher. In junior high schools, the groupings vary from 12 up to 23.6, and in senior highs, from 17.7 to 24.8.

Staff To Be Increased

Prasch said West Lincoln School staff will be increased to accommodate enrollment above staffing projections. Schools are allowed a certain number of staff members based upon a point system, with increases allowed for gifted students, the disadvantaged or learning disabled, for example, who may need extra help.

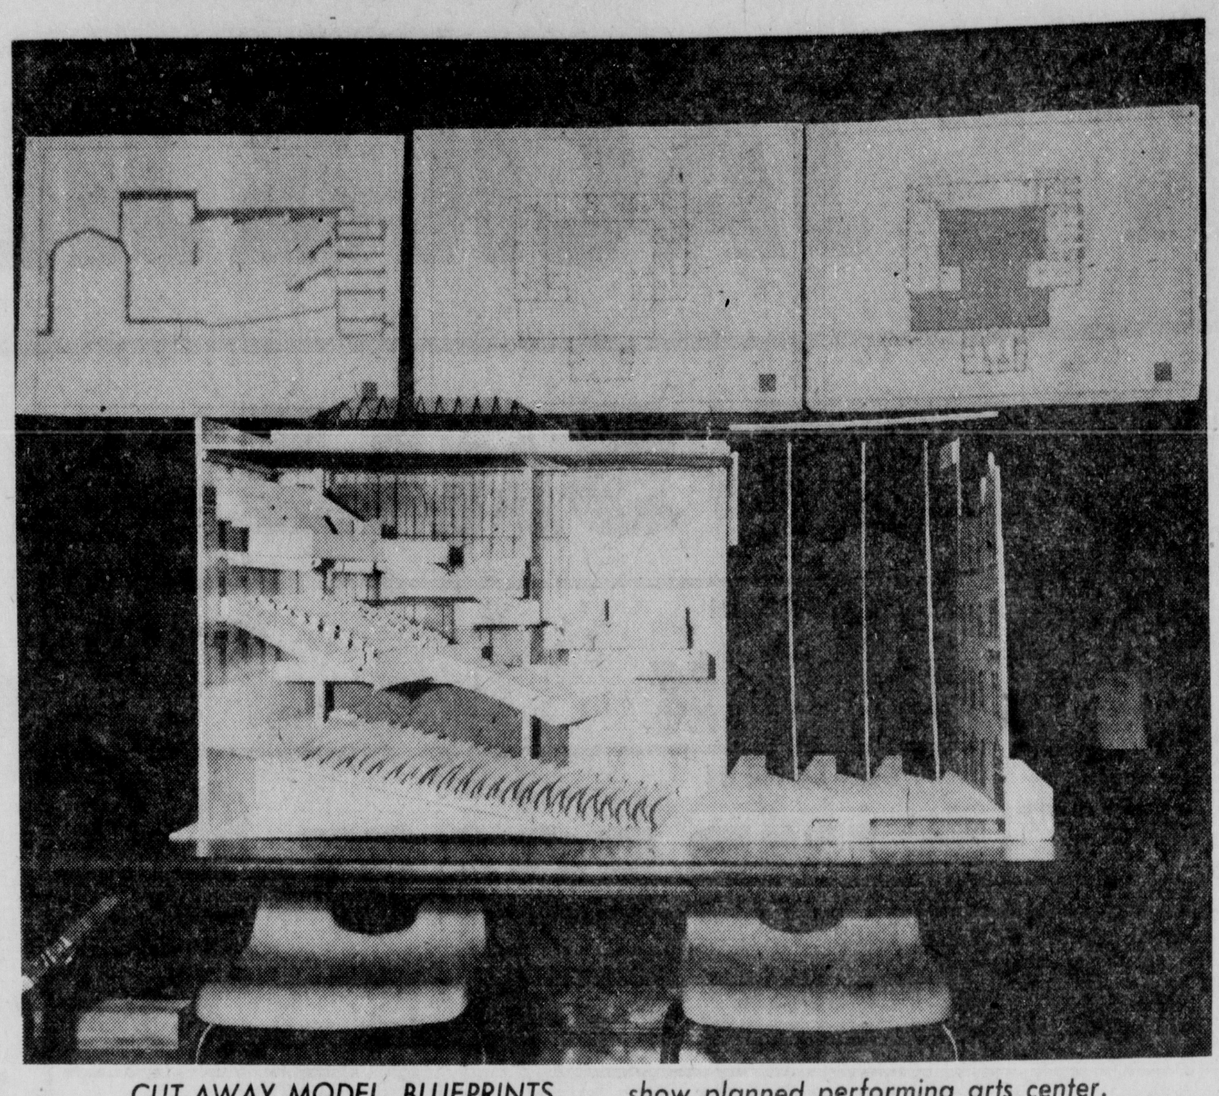

The number on a staff varies from building to building, Prasch said, noting "smaller schools tend to require larger amounts of staffing (proportionately) to provide a (minimum prescribed) program."

Traveling teachers serve schools in art, physical education and music, Prasch said, because elementary school teachers aren't specifically trained in those areas. He said he favors having such teachers permanently in each building, but acknowledged other Lincoln educators disagree philosophically.

The traveling teacher "is a poor answer to getting the services there" but is probably "the only answer" now, he said.

The superintendent reported his earlier hunch — that Lincoln parochial school enrollment increases hadn't affected public school fall registration declines — was accurate.

Total nonpublic school attendance is 3,321, up 84 or 2.6% compared to last fall. Catholic schools report 2,388 registered (up 35), Lutheran schools 353 (down two), Lincoln Christian School 173 (up 73), and Seventh Day Adventist schools 407 (down 22).

Changes On The Way At Pinewood Bowl

By J.L. SCHMIDT
Star Staff Writer

When the annual summer musical is staged at Pinewood Bowl next year, both actors and audience can expect to see "a fantastic change," Art Kuhr, Pinewood Bowl committee chairman, said Tuesday night.

An 80-foot-wide stage will replace the present 30-foot-wide one. An orchestra pit and a "green room" for actors waiting to go onstage will be added. There will be seating for 3,600.

"This will open hundreds of possibilities for what can be done here in Lincoln on an open air stage," Kuhr said.

And it is only one of several small steps that a panel of theater arts activists participating in the fourth of eight "Pieces of a City" discussions says will lead Lincoln in new cultural directions.

Architect Larry Enersen explained his proposal for renovating the old Federal Building, at 129 N. 10th, to create a 2,500-seat performing arts center.

"It's really an elaborate scheme to prevent developing the Federal Building and City Hall into a gravel parking lot," he joked.

The project would create an auditorium between the Federal Building wings, use space on the first floor and basement for dressing rooms and public waiting areas and establish the north facade of the old City Hall as the backdrop for the stage.

Lincoln Public Schools spokeswoman Ruth Ann Lyness said plans are being made to make the repertory theater company a year-round program.

The repertory company was developed last spring to give high school students who have completed speech and drama classes in their schools another outlet for their talents.

Mrs. Lyness said a fall semester program is being planned to supplement the present spring semester program.

Lenette Nelson, director of the Lincoln Community Playhouse Children's Theatre, said that program "hopefully will develop into a fulltime children's academy."

Ms. Nelson presently conducts two 14-week sessions in theater each year for 7-to12-year-olds. The first session began Sept. 22 with 34 students.

"It's important that children find a way to express themselves, and I think they can do that on the stage," she said.

Ms. Nelson said she teaches the 7-to-nine-year-olds basic theater terminology, beginning acting and technical aspects like lighting, sound and scene design.

The 10- to 12-year-olds study those things in more depth and begin working with pantomime and improvisation, she said.

Larry Lusk, Lincoln Arts Council president, said he hopes the council's fair planned for April 22-25 will become an annual event.

The fair will extend along Centennial Mall from the State Capitol to the Nebraska State Historical Society, he said, and will feature craft demonstrations, outdoor concerts, puppet shows, mime, theatre presentations and dances.

"We hope to disseminate through that fair everything that's going on in the arts in Nebraska," he said.

Cherry County Voters Say No

Valentine — With all but one of six designated voting areas reporting in late Tuesday night, the proposed school bond issue for Cherry County School District 6 was apparently headed for defeat.

According to a spokesman in the county clerk's office in Valentine, the unofficial tally (including absentee and disabled ballots) was 764 for the issue, 975 against.

The proposal involved a $3.8 million bond issue for a new high school in Valentine.

"Focus" is the big entertainment section in the "Sunday Journal and Star."

Prasch For Coordination In Closing Down Schools

While talk about schools identified for eventual closing evokes frowns and sometimes flak, Supt. John Prasch said Tuesday, "We're obligated not to ever sneak up on anybody" with such a decision.

Thus, he reopened the sensitive subject at a joint meeting of the Lincoln Board of Education and the City Council.

"We ought to join hands," he told council members, to make sure abandoning emptying schools and other long-range school district actions fit with the city plan.

Mayor Helen Boosalis said the district foresight has exceeded the city's. She noted the potential school sites bought long ago that dot Lincoln's present periphery.

Since the city can't afford to buy suitable land, Mrs. Boosalis asked if the school board would lease its sites for perhaps $1 a year, to use as mini-bike riding grounds or snowmobile areas. Prasch said most of the sites are leased to farmers, who cultivate and maintain them, but added, "we'd listen" to alternate ideas from the city.

Idea Liked

Prasch warmed to Mayor Boosalis' ideas about putting city minilibraries in parts of underused school buildings, and using those that will be closed, sold, or both.

Those include Havelock, Bethany, Hawthorne, old Riley, Saratoga, Whittier and possibly Everett. Such planning is done by analyzing school location, age, condition, enrollment and area population trends, maintenance costs; parents also are consulted.

"The council has a stake" in Whittier Junior High, which Prasch said is sound and once accommodated 1,200 students. Enrollment is down to 400.

Whittier has been offered for sale to the Southeast Community College. Mrs. Boosalis suggested the City Council "make this issue part of the legislative program."

To Councilwoman Sue Bailey's question about possible uses for Whittier, Prasch mentioned a community arts center for Lincoln students and adults. "We can't support that kind of operation without an expansion in our budget," he said, noting he's had "perfunctory talks" with foundations about grants.

Yet no time-line to abandon Whittier for school use has been set, Prasch said. School board member Pearl Goldenstein said, "The tech college has to make a decision."

Observer Asked

Mrs. Boosalis suggested a school official should sit on the Community Development Task Force, to coordinate such planning questions.

Prasch agreed. While school officials will not take sides in Council zoning fights, he said the Comprehensive Plan is "very important to us."

Prasch said his major concern is the "shift of the population to the periphery," since it causes some dificulty in justifying keeping inner-city school buildings open.

Mrs. Bailey said zoning in the McPheer School area, south of the State Capitol, for high density living with spacious green areas might attract families.

The council has genearlly barred development east of the Stevens Creek watershed, a north-south line on Lincoln's east side. "We see it as a dam," Prasch said. "We worry what happens when the dam breaks."

Already, "We're less prepared" for school expansion in Belmont and along Stevens Creek, he said, because area population influxes have overcrowded schools.

Discussing city-school reciprocal facility uses, Prasch said the newly liberalized board policy has resulted in more City Recreation program participants than school buildings can accommodate. "It would make a good argument for some more elementary school gyms," he said.

And board president Louis Roper said city-built tennis courts near schools "would help" the increasing physical education and competitive athletic needs. Such joint projects would ease school building fund cash flow problems, Prasch said.

Bids Date Set

He announced bids will be opened at 2 p.m. Thursday, in the Irving Junior High city-school recreation-gym project. The city has budgeted $300,000 maximum for the recration center portion. The school share is $700,000.

If the bids exceed limits, Prasch said the school district Athletic Building Corp. could spread city payments out, by granting a five-year loan, for example.

Another city-school project, the Meadow Lane School swimming pool, should be ready for use by next summer, Prasch said. He suggested the council and school board work toegher to redevelop older neighborhoods, such as the Clinton and Prescott School areas. Neighborhood organizations already have cooperated well with school principals and staffs.

Prasch said financially troubled Epworth Church adjacent to Clinton might consolidate with another parish elsewehere, and the "substantial" church building could be used as a center for recreation, child care or a library. Board member Jo Ann Maxey suggested relocating the tiny Clinton School library in part of the church.

Prasch cautioned, "It'd be a little hard for us to justify buying (the church building and grounds) at this point."

Change In Taxes Attacked

Lincoln Public Schools Supt. John Prasch has declared opposition to a proposed city charter revision of "in-lieu-of-tax" payments by the Lincoln Electric System (LES).

Prasch said LES makes the payments "on the same proportion we tax for property taxes," and they amount to about $500,000 in school district budgets.

LES pays 5% of its annual gross revenue as a substitute for paying property taxes on its city-owned land.

If that procedure were changed, the city council would decide if LES would pay any taxes at all, and to whom. It could increase the school property levy by one mill, while "we talk about tax relief," he told Mayor Helen Boosalis and the council.

Mrs. Boosalis said proponents of ending in-lieu-of-tax payments submit that LES "ratepayers shouldn't be paying for what should be tax-supported, altogether."

And the school district has unlimited taxing authority, she noted, while the city is "close" to its limit. Ending the LES in-lieu-of-tax payments would allow the same city tax rate to produce more revenue for other programs.

But Prasch said since the district budget is 75% dependent on the property tax, "We feel quite vulnerable" in any action that might increase the levy.

Prasch told city lawmakers they might have more influence on the Legislature by combining with the Lincoln Board of Education on some issues. He mentioned proposals for election by district, which could affect both groups.

And Prasch called possible legislative moves to take away the city sales tax (allowed in Lincoln, Omaha and Bellevue) "erroneous thinking," referring to claims it would increase chances for more state aid. Prasch said he and the school board "want to do everything we can to support you" in opposing elimination of the extra one-cent sales tax.

Without it, the city would have to rely for the resulting revenue on upped property taxes, and, "That's our budget as well," Prasch said.

Principal Blames Television For Undersocialized Children

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

Kids today are "totally undersocialized," Mickle Junior High Principal Jack Peterson says. And it's "because of TV."

In watching the tube, they "haven't learned how to deal with people."

The result in the next five years is going to be "tougher" on schools, Peterson told the Lincoln Board of Education Tuesday night. Thus, "we've got to change around the socialization process," he declared, "so people know how to solve their problems."

Peterson said, "Nobody every had any training to be a parent." To help them, Peterson and his staff are "trying to build responsibility, build success" in their students.

Using methods of Los Angeles psychiatrist William Glasser, Peterson said that means "imin-mal punishment, but there's a lot of discipline."

That also means "the responsibility's in the right place. It's with the kid," he said. Noting that educators have traditionally "created more problems than they actually solved," Peterson said his technique is to develop a way for a child to learn first where he is and how to make himself better.

"In our school, it is working," he said. "It is working because we're working at it." The philosophy is, "When you do the right thing, you get the right rewards," he said, illustrating by an incident that happened at Mickle.

Peterson said when a student threw a crab apple at a school window, part of it hit a teacher, who yelled and the student hollered back. That won a trip to Peterson's office.

Through a series of questions, Peterson impressed upon the student he'd gotten himself into this mess and away from class — where he wanted to be just then — and it was up to the student to solve his own problem.

The student finally decided he could wash the window, then guessed he'd better apologize to the teacher, even though it would be "tough" to do. He did it.

The result was so gratifying that the student told Peterson he was having trouble in math, and volunteered to show his principal his attempts to improve each morning. He did.

"What he was telling me, was somebody cared." Peterson is sharing his techniques with other Lincoln schools and Mickle parents.

The Mickle work is one part of the public schools "personal-social growth" project, to help students learn to understand themselves and others, and to interact effectively.

Ron Brandt, associate superintendent for instruction, said, "There's no way the school can avoid having an effect on students' attitudes, behavior and values."

Because they have incrasingly more independence and freedom, Brandt said, "American children are harder and harder to teach."

And "teachers are concerned," he said. After the Vietnam war, the Watergate scandal and former President Richard Nixon's conduct in office, "Americans (and students) are beginning to evaluate what is our morality."

Brandt said if a teacher does that well, "it's an appropriate part of education." He noted that personal-social growth isn't "a totally coordinated program" district-wide. But "certain schools are putting a lot of emphasis on this."

While "teachers are positive about it," the results are difficult to measure, Brandt said. It's "not a crash program," nor one that will "change things overnight."

Program goals include expanding personal-social growth opportunities in the curriculum yearly, improving personal guidance, designing a coordinated teacher training program, and assessing student feelings, attitudes and behavior.

San Francisco — The nurse put her head out the window. "Doctor is ready now." I said: "I'm not ready. I changed my mind."

She said: "Come along. Doctor is very busy today."

I said: "In that case I'll give up my appointment. I want to help any way I can."

She said: "First we'll need a blood sample."

I said: "My blood?" Fangy looking chick. Probably the Bride of Dracula. Good idea for a plot. Bride of Dracula masquerades as a nurse. Cuts down her withdrawals at the blood bank by getting it direct from the customer.

☆ ☆ ☆

The nurse ran a bayonet into my arm. She said: "It's part of the check up." As I've been advised by the health magazine — the one I read to get fresh symptoms — I get a yearly check.

"A good way to remember this is to get it on your birthday."

Following this advice has ruined my happy birthdays. But noblesse oblige.

The absolute hell of it is waiting for the check up.

☆ ☆ ☆

A week ago I began reading Today's Health. It's the AMA's magazine for the layman. It has fascinating symptoms. The Dear Abby of medicine.

"Dear Mrs. LSD: The symptoms you describe — itching, bells ringing in your ears — sounds like a typical case of falling of the room rent. I would advise you to see your physician and meantime —."

There are copies of this in the doctor's outer office. If you have to wait — we usually do — you can work up a case of blackwater fever in short order.

☆ ☆ ☆

"Doctor will be with you in a minute," she said. I sat on the table. The one covered with paper. In the glass cabinet I could see the tools of the trade: Scrapers, scalpels, chain saws.

Once I had a doctor who was in worse shape than I was.

He put the stethoscope on my chest and said: "Say 99."

I said: "OK, 99." I said: "I think I have a cholesterol blockage." (I'd just finished the magazine and was primed.)

He took the earphones out of his ears. He said: "You think you've got problems? I woke up in the middle of the night last night and —."

☆ ☆ ☆

He went on and on. Everything I had, he had it in trumps. I got so I worried about him.

I said: "You ought to take care of yourself. Have you seen a doctor?"

He said: "I wouldn't trust myself in the hands of most of those fellows. Did I tell you when I was in the hospital? And it took them five days to discover etc. etc." Everything I offered, he topped me.

He said: "Take a deep breath." He said: "Well, I can't find anything wrong with you." He sounded disappointed.

☆ ☆ ☆

He said: "If you're going to Mexico, you'd better have a shot of gamma globulin. Pull down your pants and bend over."

He stabbed me twice. I said: "For heaven's sake, I was all right when I came in here."

He said: "That's all. You can pull up your pants." He said: "I really don't know if the shots do you any good but some doctors believe in them."

He said: "Let me know how it comes out."

"I will," I said. "I will indeed."

Viet Refugee Passes Driving Test In 2 Tries

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Tai Hong, a South Vietnamese refugee who was a chauffeur at the U.S. Embassy in Saigon, has passed the written exam for a New York driver's license, but it took him two tries.

A church group that sponsors Hong said he apparently had trouble with the questions since they were asked through a Japanese interpreter.

Tai, who now works in a hospital housekeeping department, drove a number of American officials in Saigon, including the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, and former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew.

Ed Board May Inherit Problem

By DICK HOLMAN
Star Staff Writer

The Legislature "would hand the cash flow problem over to us" by having the state treasurer decide monthly how much school districts will receive in general fund payments, the Lincoln Board of Education was told Tuesday evening.

However, under Gov. J. James Exon's proposals in the special legislative session underway, state aid to schools and special education funds would be exempted from any budget rollbacks, Joseph P. Rowson pointed out.

Rowson, Lincoln Public Schools lobbyist and administrative assistant for publications and information, told board members he believes "we'll see a mix" of state administrative cash flow controls coupled with budget cuts.

Supt John Prasch said State Education Commissioner Anne Campbell is analyzing when school districts reach a low point in funds, so that any paring would not seriously jeopardize their financial stability.

"I think we're vulnerable at two points," Prasch said. One is if general fund (state tax) payments to local districts were made differently, altering budget plans in the face of standing commitments. The other is apportionment from state-owned school lands, double the amount expected.

The Lincoln board will make no formal statement at legislative committee hearings during the special session recess until Nov. 3.

In the 1976 Legislature, Prasch said he's sure services to the handicapped in community-based vs. institutional-based programs, plus settling financing of those in schools, "will be a big issue."

Having just returned from a national meeting of superintendents from cities the size of Lincoln, Prasch said school districts everywhere face "very severe" fiscal pressures. Some are confronted with "wholesale staffing cuts."

'Not Unusual'

Thus, Nebraska's state cash flow depletion with the prospect of higher taxes is "not unusual," and he said "the problem of serving handicapped children is a national concern."

In a matter of local concern, some West Lincoln School parents attended the meeting to request the board to speed up plans for an addition, to relieve overcrowding.

One parent said the elementary student enrolment there is "26% more than we should have," according to school maximums. The total, 679, includes grades 1-5.

President Louis Roper said the board will sign an agreement with an architect this week, and that "educational specifications for the addition have been developed."

Prasch explained again that the shrinking district building fund will not allow West Lincoln construction to start until at least 1976, and the addition could be ready in 1977.

In a report on school staff to students ratios, Prasch said each school building has enough professionals, associate teachers, aides, specialists and others "to have groupings of youngsters below 30 in every case."

Methods to calculate the ratio vary, from the number of teachers per student, to including some or all staff members in a building (such as specialists or clerical employes).

The range in elementary schools is 16.3 students in an all-staff ratio to a high of 29.1 per teacher. In junior high schools, the groupings vary from 12 up to 23.6, and in senior highs, from 17.7 to 24.8.

Staff To Be Increased

Prasch said West Lincoln School staff will be increased to accommodate enrollment above staffing projections. Schools are allowed a certain number of staff members based upon a point system, with increases allowed for gifted students, the disadvantaged or learning disabled, for example, who may need extra help.

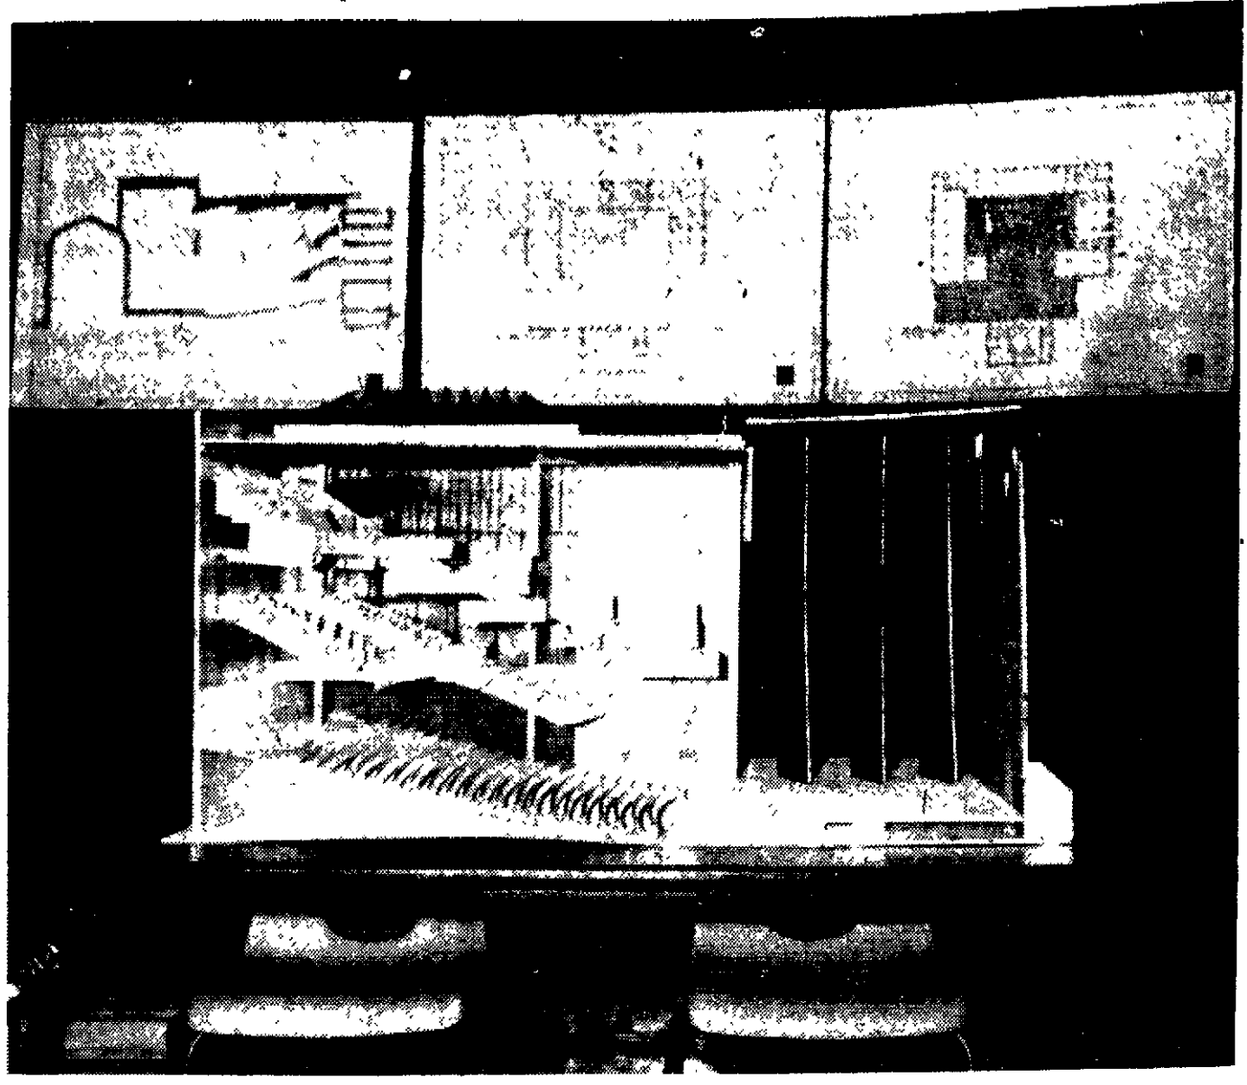

The number on a staff varies from building to building, Prasch said, noting "smaller schools tend to require larger amounts of staffing (proportionately) to provide a (minimum prescribed) program."

Traveling teachers serve schools in art, physical education and music, Prasch said, because elementary school teachers aren't specifically trained in those areas. He said he favors having such teachers permanently in each building, but acknowledged other Lincoln educators disagree philosophically.

The traveling teacher "is a poor answer to getting the services there" but is probably "the only answer" now, he said.

The superintendent reported his earlier hunch — that Lincoln parochial school enrollment increases hadn't affected public school fall registration declines — was accurate.

Total nonpublic school attendance is 3,321, up 84 or 2.6% compared to last fall. Catholic schools report 2,388 registered (up 35), Lutheran schools 353 (down two), Lincoln Christian School 173 (up 73), and Seventh Day Adventist schools 407 (down 22).

CUT-AWAY MODEL, BLUEPRINTS . . . show planned performing arts center.

Changes On The Way At Pinewood Bowl

By J.L. SCHMIDT
Star Staff Writer

When the annual summer musical is staged at Pinewood Bowl next year, both actors and audience can expect to see "a fantastic change," Art Kuhr, Pinewood Bowl committee chairman, said Tuesday night.

An 80-foot-wide stage will replace the present 30-foot-wide one. An orchestra pit and a "green room" for actors waiting to go onstage will be added. There will be seating for 3,600.

"This will open hundreds of possibilities for what can be done here in Lincoln on an open air stage," Kuhr said.

And it is only one of several small steps that a panel of theater arts activists participating in the fourth of eight "Pieces of a City" discussions says will lead Lincoln in new cultural directions.

Architect Larry Enersen explained his proposal for renovating the old Federal Building, at 129 N. 10th, to create a 2,500-seat performing arts center.

"It's really an elaborate scheme to prevent developing the Federal Building and City Hall into a gravel parking lot," he joked.

The project would create an auditorium between the Federal Building wings, use space on the first floor and basement for dressing rooms and public waiting areas and establish the north facade of the old City Hall as the backdrop for the stage.

Lincoln Public Schools spokeswoman Ruth Ann Lyness said plans are being made to make the repertory theater company a year-round program.

The repertory company was developed last spring to give high school students who have completed speech and drama classes in their schools another outlet for their talents.

Mrs. Lyness said a fall semester program is being planned to supplement the present spring semester program.

Lenette Nelson, director of the Lincoln Community Playhouse Children's Theatre, said that program "hopefully will develop into a fulltime children's academy."

Ms. Nelson presently conducts two 14-week sessions in theater each year for 7-to12-year-olds. The first session began Sept. 22 with 34 students.

"It's important that children find a way to express themselves, and I think they can do that on the stage," she said.

Ms. Nelson said she teaches the 7-to-nine-year-olds basic theater terminology, beginning acting and technical aspects like lighting, sound and scene design.

The 10- to 12-year-olds study those things in more depth and begin working with pantomime and improvisation, she said.

Larry Lusk, Lincoln Arts Council president, said he hopes the council's fair planned for April 22-25 will become an annual event.

The fair will extend along Centennial Mall from the State Capitol to the Nebraska State Historical Society, he said, and will feature craft demonstrations, outdoor concerts, puppet shows, mime, theatre presentations and dances.

"We hope to disseminate through that fair everything that's going on in the arts in Nebraska," he said.

Cherry County Voters Say No

Valentine — With all but one of six designated voting areas reporting in late Tuesday night, the proposed school bond issue for Cherry County School District 6 was apparently headed for defeat.

According to a spokesman in the county clerk's office in Valentine, the unofficial tally (including absentee and disabled ballots) was 764 for the issue, 975 against.

The proposal involved a $3.8 million bond issue for a new high school in Valentine.

Prasch For Coordination In Closing Down Schools

While talk about schools identified for eventual closing evokes frowns and sometimes flak, Supt. John Prasch said Tuesday, "We're obligated not to ever sneak up on anybody" with such a decision.

Thus, he reopened the sensitive subject at a joint meeting of the Lincoln Board of Education and the City Council.

"We ought to join hands," he told council members, to make sure abandoning emptying schools and other long-range school district actions fit with the city plan.

Mayor Helen Boosalis said the district foresight has exceeded the city's. She noted the potential school sites bought long ago that dot Lincoln's present periphery.

Since the city can't afford to buy suitable land, Mrs Boosalis asked if the school board would lease its sites for perhaps $1 a year, to use as mini-bike riding grounds or snowmobile areas. Prasch said most of the sites are leased to farmers, who cultivate and maintain them, but added, "we'd listen" to alternate ideas from the city.

Idea Liked

Prasch warmed to Mayor Boosalis' ideas about putting city minilibraries in parts of underused school buildings, and using those that will be closed, sold, or both.

Those include Havelock, Bethany, Hawthorne, old Riley, Saratoga, Whittier and possibly Everett. Such planning is done by analyzing school location, age, condition, enrollment and area population trends, maintenance costs; parents also are consulted.

"The council has a stake" in Whittier Junior High, which Prasch said is sound and once accommodated 1,200 students. Enrollment is down to 400.

Whittier has been offered for sale to the Southeast Community College. Mrs. Boosalis suggested the City Council "make this issue part of the legislative program."

To Councilwoman Sue Bailey's question about possible uses for Whittier, Prasch mentioned a community arts center for Lincoln students and adults. "We can't support that kind of operation without an expansion in our budget," he said, noting he's had "perfunctory talks" with foundations about grants.

Yet no time-line to abandon Whittier for school use has been set, Prasch said. School board member Pearl Goldenstein said, "The tech college has to make a decision."

Observer Asked

Mrs. Boosalis suggested a school official should sit on the Community Development Task Force, to coordinate such planning questions.

Prasch agreed. While school officials will not take sides in Council zoning fights, he said the Comprehensive Plan is "very important to us."

Prasch said his major concern is the "shift of the population to the periphery," since it causes some dificulty in justifying keeping inner-city school buildings open.

Mrs. Bailey said zoning in the McPheer School area, south of the State Capitol, for high density living with spacious green areas might attract families.

The council has genearlly barred development east of the Stevens Creek watershed, a north-south line on Lincoln's east side. "We see it as a dam," Prasch said. "We worry what happens when the dam breaks."

Already, "We're less prepared" for school expansion in Belmont and along Stevens Creek, he said, because area population influxes have overcrowded schools.

Discussing city-school reciprocal facility uses, Prasch said the newly liberalized board policy has resulted in more City Recreation program participants than school buildings can accommodate. "It would make a good argument for some more elementary school gyms," he said.

And board president Louis Roper said city-built tennis courts near schools "would help" the increasing physical education and competitive athletic needs. Such joint projects would ease school building fund cash flow problems, Prasch said.

Bids Date Set

He announced bids will be opened at 2 p.m. Thursday, in the Irving Junior High city-school recreation-gym project. The city has budgeted $300,000 maximum for the recration center portion. The school share is $700,000.

If the bids exceed limits, Prasch said the school district Athletic Building Corp. could spread city payments out, by granting a five-year loan, for example.

Another city-school project, the Meadow Lane School swimming pool, should be ready for use by next summer, Prasch said. He suggested the council and school board work toegher to redevelop older neighborhoods, such as the Clinton and Prescott School areas. Neighborhood organizations already have cooperated well with school principals and staffs.

Prasch said financially troubled Epworth Church adjacent to Clinton might consolidate with another parish elsewehere, and the "substantial" church building could be used as a center for recreation, child care or a library. Board member Jo Ann Maxey suggested relocating the tiny Clinton School library in part of the church.

Prasch cautioned, "It'd be a little hard for us to justify buying (the church building and grounds) at this point."

Change In Taxes Attacked

Lincoln Public Schools Supt. John Prasch has declared opposition to a proposed city charter revision of "in-lieu-of-tax" payments by the Lincoln Electric System (LES).

Prasch said LES makes the payments "on the same proportion we tax for property taxes," and they amount to about $500,000 in school district budgets.

LES pays 5% of its annual gross revenue as a substitute for paying property taxes on its city-owned land.

If that procedure were changed, the city council would decide if LES would pay any taxes at all, and to whom. It could increase the school property levy by one mill, while "we talk about tax relief," he told Mayor Helen Boosalis and the council.

Mrs. Boosalis said proponents of ending in-lieu-of-tax payments submit that LES "ratepayers shouldn't be paying for what should be tax-supported, altogether."

And the school district has unlimited taxing authority, she noted, while the city is "close" to its limit. Ending the LES in-lieu-of-tax payments would allow the same city tax rate to produce more revenue for other programs.

But Prasch said since the district budget is 75% dependent on the property tax, "We feel quite vulnerable" in any action that might increase the levy.

Prasch told city lawmakers they might have more influence on the Legislature by combining with the Lincoln Board of Education on some issues. He mentioned proposals for election by district, which could affect both groups.

And Prasch called possible legislative moves to take away the city sales tax (allowed in Lincoln, Omaha and Bellevue) "erroneous thinking," referring to claims it would increase chances for more state aid. Prasch said he and the school board "want to do everything we can to support you" in opposing elimination of the extra one-cent sales tax.

Without it, the city would have to rely for the resulting revenue on upped property taxes, and, "That's our budget as well," Prasch said.

Principal Blames Television For Undersocialized Children

"What he was telling me, was somebody cared." Peterson is sharing his techniques with other Lincoln schools and Mickle parents.

The Mickle work is one part of the public schools "personal-social growth" project, to help students learn to understand themselves and others, and to interact effectively.

Ron Brandt, associate superintendent for instruction, said, "There's no way the school can avoid having an effect on students' attitudes, behavior and values."

Because they have incrasingly more independence and freedom, Brandt said, "American children are harder and harder to teach."

And "teachers are concerned," he said. After the Vietnam war, the Watergate scandal and former President Richard Nixon's conduct in office, "Americans (and students) are beginning to evaluate what is our morality."

Brandt said if a teacher does that well, "it's an appropriate part of education." He noted that personal-social growth isn't "a totally coordinated program" district-wide. But "certain schools are putting a lot of emphasis on this."

While "teachers are positive about it," the results are difficult to measure, Brandt said. It's "not a crash program," nor one that will "change things overnight."

Program goals include expanding personal-social growth opportunities in the curriculum yearly, improving personal guidance, designing a coordinated teacher training program, and assessing student feelings, attitudes and behavior.

San Francisco — The nurse put her head out the window. "Doctor is ready now." I said: "I'm not ready. I changed my mind."

She said: "Come along. Doctor is very busy today."

I said: "In that case I'll give up my appointment. I want to help any way I can."

She said: "First we'll need a blood sample."

I said: "My blood?" Fangy looking chick. Probably the Bride of Dracula. Good idea for a plot. Bride of Dracula masquerades as a nurse. Cuts down her withdrawals at the blood bank by getting it direct from the customer.

☆ ☆ ☆

The nurse ran a bayonet into my arm. She said: "It's part of the check up." As I've been advised by the health magazine — the one I read to get fresh symptoms — I get a yearly check.

"A good way to remember this is to get it on your birthday."

Following this advice has ruined my happy birthdays. But noblesse oblige.

The absolute hell of it is waiting for the check up.

☆ ☆ ☆

A week ago I began reading Today's Health. It's the AMA's magazine for the layman. It has fascinating symptoms. The Dear Abby of medicine.

"Dear Mrs. LSD: The symptoms you describe — itching, bells ringing in your ears — sounds like a typical case of falling of the room rent. I would advise you to see your physician and meantime —."

There are copies of this in the doctor's outer office. If you have to wait — we usually do — you can work up a case of blackwater fever in short order.

☆ ☆ ☆

"Doctor will be with you in a minute," she said. I sat on the table. The one covered with paper. In the glass cabinet I could see the tools of the trade: Scrapers, scalpels, chain saws.

Once I had a doctor who was in worse shape than I was.

He put the stethoscope on my chest and said: "Say 99."

I said: "OK, 99." I said: "I think I have a cholesterol blockage." (I'd just finished the magazine and was primed.)

He took the earphones out of his ears. He said: "You think you've got problems? I woke up in the middle of the night last night and —."

☆ ☆ ☆

He went on and on. Everything I had, he had it in trumps. I got so I worried about him.

I said: "You ought to take care of yourself. Have you seen a doctor?"

He said: "I wouldn't trust myself in the hands of most of those fellows. Did I tell you when I was in the hospital? And it took them five days to discover etc. etc." Everything I offered, he topped me.

He said: "Take a deep breath." He said: "Well, I can't find anything wrong with you." He sounded disappointed.

☆ ☆ ☆

He said: "If you're going to Mexico, you'd better have a shot of gamma globulin. Pull down your pants and bend over."

He stabbed me twice. I said: "For heaven's sake, I was all right when I came in here."

He said: "That's all. You can pull up your pants." He said: "I really don't know if the shots do you any good but some doctors believe in them."

He said: "Let me know how it comes out."

"I will," I said. "I will indeed."

Viet Refugee Passes Driving Test In 2 Tries

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Tai Hong, a South Vietnamese refugee who was a chauffeur at the U.S. Embassy in Saigon, has passed the written exam for a New York driver's license, but it took him two tries.

A church group that sponsors Hong said he apparently had trouble with the questions since they were asked through a Japanese interpreter.

Tai, who now works in a hospital housekeeping department, drove a number of American officials in Saigon, including the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, and former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew.

Transit Bus Business Enjoying 30-Year Boom

DETROIT (AP) — The transit bus business is enjoying its biggest boom in nearly 30 years, thanks to an infusion of government funds and renewed interest in urban mass transportation.

Dormant for two decades, bus production is on an upswing which industry officials predict will accelerate in the 1980s. They pin their forecasts on the need to conserve fuel and the growing recognition that buses are a versatile and low-cost form of mass transit.

The nation's three transit bus makers expect to build 5,000 units by the end of this year, up nearly 20 per cent from last year and the highest output since 1948.

"We're having our best year ever because of the funding Congress has authorized and the continued need to increase facilities for mass transit," says Bass Dyer, vice president of Flxible Co., the No. 2 bus maker.

"We attribute the boom to the increasing cost of fuel, possible scarcity of fuel and the need to improve the environment. People are realizing that you cannot continue to surface the United States with concrete to take care of private automobiles."

Flxible, a subsidiary of the Rohr Corp., plans to build 1,600 buses at its Delaware, Oho, plant this year, up from 1,300 in 1974.

General Motors' truck and coach division in Pontiac, Mich., the No. 1 producer, expects to assemble 2,000 coaches this year, about the same number as last year.

GMC is looking for a large jump in sales after next summer, when its first new bus in 17 years hits the market.

The newcomer to the field, AM General, a subsidiary of American Motors Corp., expects bus output at its Mishawaka, Ind., plant to reach 1,400 by the end of the year. In 1974, AMC's first year in the transit bus business, its subsidiary produced 850 units.

AM General was able to enter the business — long dominated by GMC — because of a Justice Department consent decree GMC signed in 1965.

Charged with monopoiy in the bus market, GM agreed to make its engine-axle-transmission designs and components available to any other competitor through 1990.

Each regular-size bus costs an average $65,000 and has a normal lifetime of 15 years. The engines, all supplied by GM's Detroit Diesel Allison Division, operate on lower-cost diesel fuel and have a lifetime of 500,000 miles in city driving. GM officials say the engines can last two million miles in intercity travel.

Transit bus production in this country peaked during the years just after World War II, with output topping 12,000 units in 1947. Then the rapid decline began, with output falling to 7,000 units in 1948. In the past 20 years, production vacillated between 1,500 and 3,000 units a year.

Edward R. Stokel, director of public transportation at GMC, attributes the decline in transit bus production to a dramatic shift in population patterns in the late 1940s.

"Populations began shifting from the central city to suburban areas and created lower-density regions," he said.

"It made it prohibitive from a cost standpoint for bus lines to go out into those areas. At the same time, the availability of new automobiles increased, and the government began spending money on highway construction.

"The transit industry was going through a very difficult period. It was losing passengers because of the population shift. As revenues declined, it raised fares, which only resulted in further losses of passengers. It became a vicious circle. And all the time, the cost of fuel, parts and the like kept going up."

In the past five years, Stokel says, there has been a tremendous transition from private to public ownership of mass transit facilities. That change is responsible for the resurgence in the industry.

"Government assumed the role of providing mass transportation, and was willing to do it at a deficit if necessary," he says. "You immediately saw an extension of service, and in some cities — like Atlanta and Los Angeles — a cut in fares to invite more passengers."

In addition to purchasing buses for wider service, cities have begun to upgrade facilities by replacing buses that were 20 or more years old.

Industry officials expect bus output to top 6,000 units by 1980. Production could be considerably higher if cities follow through on proposals by some lawmakers that cars be prohibited from downtown districts.

'Tartuffe' Selected

Baltimore (UPI) — Center Stage, Baltimore's only resident professional theater company, has picked Moliere's "Tartuffe" to open its 1975-76 season in December in its new 500-seat house. Later productions will be: a double bill of Charles Eastman's "Busy Bee Good Food All Night Delicious" and "Borders;" "Dream on Monkey Mountain" by West Indian poet-playwright Derek Walcott; Harold Pinter's "Old Times;" "Chekhov's "The Cherry Orchard;" and Augustin Daly's 1867 melodrama "Under the Gaslight."

ETV Staffers' Designs Cited

Two staff members of the Nebraska ETV network have received awards from the University and College Designers Association.

A Design Competition Silver Award was received by art director Bill Korbus and staff designer Michael Buettner for their design of "The Great Plains Experience: The Great Depression."

Buettner and Korbus also received a merit award for another portion of the same TV show, and Korbus won a merit award for design and illustration of the locally-produced "Rap About It" television series.

Savings Reported

Hong Kong (UPI) — The number of new savings accounts opened at banks in Chengtu, capital of China's Szechuan province, during the first six months of 1975 totaled 40,000, a Chengtu radio report said. The population of Chengtu is estimated at 1.5 million.

Charity Untouched

Washington (UPI)—Rep. James C. Corman, D-Calif., a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, has told a meeting of the Baptist joint committee on public affairs that any tax reform legislation to come out of the current Congress will not include any changes in present deductibility provisions for gifts to churches and other charities.

Reminiscences Of Home

The author, Glen L. Gingles, was born and raised on a farm in southeastern Nebraska. He has worked as an automobile mechanic, grocer, radio operator, TV repairman, mail carrier, postal supervisor, and is now retired.

Rumors that the house in which I was born would soon be torn down brought a wave of nostalgia and a trip to the southeastern part of the state where it was located.

When I drove into the farmyard, a quarter of a mile from the road, the old house looked the same as I remembered — only a trifle more weather-beaten. The generous front yard was still surrounded by a woven wire fence stapled to ancient hedge posts. The wooden gate hung dilapidated and sagging on one hinge.

I slumped back into the seat as I surveyed the crumbling brick walk from the gate to the broad front porch where my family used to gather to catch the cool breeze on long hot summer evenings. I closed my eyes and let my memory continue on through the front door into the spacious dining room. Assembling place for many hungry threshing crews, it extended almost the full length of the house. On into the ample kitchen with it's cast iron sink and water pump in one corner. There was the massive black range my mother cooked on as she prepared great platters of juicy roast beef, piles of fried chicken, stacks of snowy mashed potatoes, baked beans, chocolate cakes, spicy apple pies, and gallons of hot coffee and iced tea.

From the dining room, one door led to my parents' bedroom, another to the parlor where, during the winter, the entire downstairs was heated by a huge base-burner, it's isinglass windows beaming out a cheery red glow. A narrow stairway led steeply to the unheated rooms upstairs where my brothers and I slept through the long frigid winter nights under piles of blankets.

How I wished I could wake once again to the serenade of hundreds of song-birds in the grove nearby. And hear once more the homey sounds of crowing roosters, cackling hens, bawling calves, and squealing pigs. I could almost hear my father calling the hogs to the feeding trough, "Wa-a-ie, wa-a-ie, — here pig, pig, pig."

I imagined I could smell again the tantalizing aroma of perking coffee, fresh biscuits, bacon frying in the kitchen. I caught a whiff of the pungent odor of fresh manure from the barnyard, then the breeze changed direction bringing the fragrance of apple, peach, and plum trees in bloom and the scent of wild flowers from the meadow.

I remembered the good times we had, how happy we were, how close as a family. Too, I knew now how poor we were, financially. So were our neighbors, but none of us knew it at that time. By today's standards, most of us were living below the poverty level. We never gave it a thought. We did the best we could, paid our debts, went to church on Sundays, lived within our means, worked hard and played when we had time.

My eyes opened with a start. The sun had gone down and soon it would be dark. I'm glad I saw the old place once more before the wreckers come, I thought.

Opening lead - queen of clubs.

Nobody ever contended that Endplay Charlie was a great player. His bidding was bad, his defense mediocre, and his dummy play — in general — left much to be desired.

But when it came to endplays, nobody could surpass Charlie. He could smell an endplay a mile away, and he was never happier than when he was executing one. This talent he had was really exceptional, and if the rest of his game had only been on a par with it, he would have ranked as the best player in the world.

Here is an example of Charlie strutting his stuff. Perhaps West shouldn't have doubled six spades — particularly with Endplay Charlie at the wheel — but West felt sure he had two trump tricks, so he did.

Charlie thereupon proceeded to wrap the contract right around his neck. Alerted by the double that West had all the missing trumps, Charlie held West to one trump trick.

He discarded a heart on the king of clubs and ruffed a club. After cashing the A-K of diamonds and ruffing a diamond, he trumped another club. Next he played the A-K of hearts and ruffed a heart, at which point this became the position:

South

Charlie now led the ace of clubs, ruffing it with the eight, then played the jack of diamonds. It did not matter which card West ruffed with — he could score only one trump trick.

Minister Had Full House

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday, I attended the third funeral in two months, and I promised myself I would not attend another whose services were conducted by this minister.

Each time I was trapped for over an hour with a preacher who started with the sins of Adam and Eve and worked his way through the New Testament.

He said nothing to comfort the family and made no mention of the deceased. Instead, he launched into a tirade, calling everyone present "sinners" and predicting that the world was going to hell because of its greed and selfishness. Then he wrapped it up with a pitch to raise money for the church's building campaign.

It was revolting!

People come to a funeral to pay their last respects to the deceased, not to be bawled out by the preacher or to be solicited for money.

What is your opinion of a minister who would take advantage of a full house in the above manner?

REVOLTED IN ROANOKE

DEAR REVOLTED: I think he's a short-sighted opportunist who believes in shooting the ducks while they're flying.

DEAR ABBY: My husband retired recently and found himself with very few pleasures and interests, so he bought a myna bird. Now he spends all his time teaching the bird dirty words and vulgar phrases.

Needless to say, a foul-talking myna bird is a source of much embarrassment when I have my bridge club meetings here. Also, it's a very bad example for my grandchildren who visit me often.

I have asked my husband to please get rid of that bird, but he refuses.

Please help me before I move in with my daughter and her family.

SERIOUS IN EUGENE, ORE.

DEAR SERIOUS: Don't move. Instead, move the bird to the garage, basement, attic or some out-of-the-way place where its X-rated monologue will not offend tender ears.

DEAR ABBY: I have this very dear friend I'll call "Agnes." She's alone, so I invite her to my home for dinner occasionally.

Agnes is the sweetest, most generous person I know, but she weights about 400 pounds, and when she plops herself down, she wrecks our furniture.

First she broke the springs in our new sofa. Another time, she broke my husband's favorite rocking chair. Fortunately, my husband is very handy, so he was able to repair the chair. However, he has instructed me to please invite Agnes OUT for dinner in the future because he's worried about our furniture.

I don't want to offend Agnes, but I don't want to take any more chances with our furniture.

Is there a solution?

AGNES' FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: Of course. Lucky you to have a husband who's handy with repairs. Ask him to reinforce one chair to accommodate Agens. Surely that isn't too much to do for the sweetest, most generous person you know.

DEAR ABBY: How can I break my husband of the habit of calling me "Mamma"? And are there other wives who dislike it as much as I do?

I don't mind his referring to be as "M'mma" when he talks to one of the children — for instance, "Go get Mamma."

But when he says to me, "Mamma, will you please hand me the paper?" it irritates me to no end!

I am NOT his Mamma. And I do not want him to call me "M'mma." If I had wanted to be his Mamma I would have adopted him, not married him.

Will you please put this in your column? He reads you religiously and maybe it will take effect. Telling him hasn't helped.

NOT "MAMMA"

DEAR OT: Here's your letter. Now tape it to his bathroom mirror so he can see it every time he shaves.

Transit Bus Business Enjoying 30-Year Boom

DETROIT (AP) — The transit bus business is enjoying its biggest boom in nearly 30 years, thanks to an infusion of government funds and renewed interest in urban mass transportation.

Dormant for two decades, bus production is on an upswing which industry officials predict will accelerate in the 1980s. They pin their forecasts on the need to conserve fuel and the growing recognition that buses are a versatile and low-cost form of mass transit.

The nation's three transit bus makers expect to build 5,000 units by the end of this year, up nearly 20 per cent from last year and the highest output since 1948.

"We're having our best year ever because of the funding Congress has authorized and the continued need to increase facilities for mass transit," says Bass Dyer, vice president of Flxible Co., the No. 2 bus maker.

"We attribute the boom to the increasing cost of fuel, possible scarcity of fuel and the need to improve the environment. People are realizing that you cannot continue to surface the United States with concrete to take care of private automobiles."

Flxible, a subsidiary of the Rohr Corp., plans to build 1,600 buses at its Delaware, Ohio, plant this year, up from 1,300 in 1974.

General Motors' truck and coach division in Pontiac, Mich., the No. 1 producer, expects to assemble 2,000 coaches this year, about the same number as last year.

GMC is looking for a large jump in sales after next summer, when its first new bus in 17 years hits the market.

The newcomer to the field, AM General, a subsidiary of American Motors Corp., expects bus output at its Mishawaka, Ind., plant to reach 1,400 by the end of the year. In 1974, AMC's first year in the transit bus business, its subsidiary produced 850 units.

AM General was able to enter the business — long dominated by GMC — because of a Justice Department consent decree GMC signed in 1966.

Charged with monopoiy in the bus market, GM agreed to make its engine-axle-transmission designs and components available to any other competitor through 1980.

Each regular-size bus costs an average $65,000 and has a normal lifetime of 15 years. The engines, all supplied by GM's Detroit Diesel Allison Division, operate on lower-cost diesel fuel and have a lifetime of 500,000 miles in city driving. GM officials say the engines can last two million miles in intercity travel.

Transit bus production in this country peaked during the years just after World War II, with output topping 12,000 units in 1947. Then the rapid decline began, with output falling to 7,000 units in 1948. In the past 20 years, production vacillated between 1,500 and 3,000 units a year.

Edward R. Stokel, director of public transportation at GMC, attributes the decline in transit bus production to a dramatic shift in population patterns in the late 1940s.

"Populations began shifting from the central city to suburban areas and created lower-density regions," he said.

"It made it prohibitive from a cost standpoint for bus lines to go out into those areas. At the same time, the availability of new automobiles increased, and the government began spending money on highway construction.

"The transit industry was going through a very difficult period. It was losing passengers because of the population shift. As revenues declined, it raised fares, which only resulted in further losses of passengers. It became a vicious circle. And all the time, the cost of fuel, parts and the like kept going up."

In the past five years, Stokel says, there has been a tremendous transition from private to public ownership of mass transit facilities. That change is responsible for the resurgence in the industry.

"Government assumed the role of providing mass transportation, and was willing to do it at a deficit if necessary," he says. "You immediately saw an extension of service, and in some cities — like Atlanta and Los Angeles — a cut in fares to invite more passengers."

In addition to purchasing buses for wider service, cities have begun to upgrade facilities by replacing buses that were 20 or more years old.

Industry officials expect bus output to top 6,000 units by 1980. Production could be considerably higher if cities follow through on proposals by some lawmakers that cars be prohibited from downtown districts.

Savings Reported

Hong Kong (UPI) — The number of new savings accounts opened at banks in Chengtu, capital of China's Szechuan province, during the first six months of 1975 totaled 40,000, a Chengtu radio report said. The population of Chengtu is estimated at 1.5 million.

Charity Untouched

Washington (UPI)—Rep. James C. Community Living Program Provides Alternative To 50

By NANCY HICKS
Star Staff Writer

Six bodies, faces upward, stretched out on the brown tweed carpet, breathing slowing in . . . and out . . .

Six minds strolling gracefully through a green meadow, climbing a path upward to the crest of a tall hill. Then meeting someone at the top of that hill.

"But I couldn't find anyone. I looked, but no one was around. It was so lonely."

That was the beginning of a two-hour group therapy session for individuals with emotional problems, people with families, with jobs; but people with the kind of hurts and aches that can't be cured with a bandage or a surgeon's knife.

The group therapy session is one segment of the Community Living Program, a program that provides an alternative to institutionalization for more than 50 county residents.

The three-year-old Community Living Program, a service of the Lincoln-Lancaster Mental Health Clinic, operates out of an older two-story house at 2145 S. 13th St.

With 15 parttime and fulltime employes, the Community Living Program offers daily programs for 30 to 40 individuals with chronic emotional problems. These are people who have been in the state hospital and now need help getting back into society, need help learning how to deal with people again, explained Dr. Ron Breazeale, program director.

The chronic clients are divided into two groups: One group works on learning basic skills — to feel comfortable in groups and being around other people. In the second group, the emphasis is more on working through problems in a group setting, and there is more conventional use of therapy, psycho drama.

Chronic clients become involved in such areas as assertion training, problem solving, recreational therapy and crafts, and there is even an exercise group.

This day treatment program has its roots in a similar program for Regional Center clients which started about a decade ago in the boiler room on the Regional Center grounds.

"Just because a person is bent out of shape doesn't mean he has to go to a hospital and break up a home," said Dr. Breazeale.

These are people like you and me. They're like the people next door pretty much; they just have a few more problems, explained group leaders Jim Fuller and Nancy Forst.

Fuller and Ms. Forst run unstructured sessions focusing on individual problems.

One evening they spent more than half an hour working through the hostility one young man felt toward Nancy.

"This is a chance to try out differing ways of being in the world," explained Fuller. Expressing hostility in the group setting doesn't jeopardize job or home situations.

The two are adept at reading the nuances behind the words. One young woman repeatedly expressed fear over an upcoming date. She said she was scared of a new life style which included several new male friends.

But Fuller picked up on the inflection behind the words. "You say you're frightened, but it sounds to me like you are really excited."

"Yeah, that's right," the young woman answered.

Improvement is more noticeable within the acute program. Here many of the clients work through their problems and move on and out, able to deal with the world without supportive services.

The chronic program, for the most part, is a holding pattern, a maintenance program to provide daily activities until alternatives within the community can be found.

Clients in both programs are referred from the Regional Center, from the mental health clinic and from private psychiatrists.

And the fees for the program are based on ability to pay.

There is one walk-in patron, who pays nothing and, in fact, mooches room and board off the program. Cuddles, the large black and white cat, is a welcome and loving visitor at day-time programs and the evening sessions alike.

Presley Repays Dog World For Its Help

West Boylston, Mass. (UPI)—Elvis Presley, who started his fortune by singing about a "hound dog," is repaying the dog world for its help by lavishing money and medical care on his sick pet.

Presley's 10-month-old male chow, Getlo, recently spent more than two months at a veterinary hospital in this central Massachusetts community where he was treated for a near-fatal kidney ailment.

The dog spent the first few days at a posh Boston hotel and was personally cared for at the home of Dr. S. Lynn Kittleson, director of the New England Institute of Comparative Medicine.

When Getlo was discharged this week, he flew home to Memphis, Tenn., as the lone passenger on Presley's personal Lear jet, complete with two pilots.

The dog had been rushed to Boston by jet at 3 p.m. Aug. 12, when veterinarians "gave the dog a poor prognosis," said Kittleson.

Getlo was treated at the Copley Plaza Hotel for two days because veterinarians feared he couldn't make the 50-mile trip to West Boylston.

"The dog was in real bad shape when he came," she said. "We were even thinking about a kidney transplant or dialysis. But the dog now appears perfectly normal. He'll require only 15 minutes of treatment daily."

For the rest of his life, Getlo will have to have fluids injected into his body to prevent dehydration.

The veterinarian refused to discuss the cost of the treatment, but said, "This dog was treated very specially. I kept the dog home and kept it with me. He really required intensive care."

The dog's presence was kept secret for fear he might be harmed.

"We didn't want to tell anyone because we were afraid the farm would be mobbed and the dog be stolen and ransomed," said Dr. Robert J. Tashjian, the institute's president.

Why 15,000 Of The Little Devils?

Houston (UPI) — Bob Speca Jr. doesn't even like to play dominoes. So why does he have 15,000 of the little devils?

Why, to stand on end and knock over, of course.

What person has ever looked at a pile of small, rectangular blocks and been able to resist lining them up and toppling them over just to prove the domino theory is still sound?

Certainly not the 18-year-old Speca. What began as a high school math problem has turned into a unique, but somewhat out-of-hand, hobby.

The University of Pennsylvania freshman from the Philadelphia suburb of Broomall began with four boxes of dominoes three years ago to prove a math theory of infinite numbers.

He soon plans to set up and topple all 15,000 to break his own record of 11,111 dominoes, but his goal is far more ambitious.

"I hope to buy some land the size of a football field, put a building over it and put in a level glass floor," he explained. "Then I'm going to set up 1,111,-111 dominoes, a record no one will ever beat."

So here he is, crawling around a 400-square-foot platform on the third floor of a downtown department store, methodically setting up 5,500 dominoes just to watch them fall — and earn $500 for his appearance.

The line of dominoes stretched 15 feet in a straight line, then doubled back and over a ramp made of empty domino boxes and a thin yardstick. Then came a series of curves, short straightaways, more ramps, an intricate circle, a figure-eight, another circle and more curves and straights.

Six hours later, after several other false starts, Speca is ready.

He knelt next to his creation as the crowd counted down from 10.

Speca's index finger tapped the first domino and the theory was off and running, looking like a swift, black snake writhing across the floor. The crowd cheered each ramp, remained breath swallowingly quiet for each intricate circle and oohed the final eight parallel rows before the reaction ended with 28 ivory dominoes.

Not a domino remained standing. One youngster, whose eyes were wide with amazement, asked the domono wizard to do it again. Speca just smiled.

Reminiscences Of Home

The author, Glen L. Gingles, was born and raised on a farm in southeastern Nebraska. He has worked as an automobile mechanic, grocer, radio operator, TV repairman, mail carrier, postal supervisor, and is now retired.

Rumors that the house in which I was born would soon be torn down brought a wave of nostalgia and a trip to the southeastern part of the state where it was located.

When I drove into the farmyard, a quarter of a mile from the road, the old house looked the same as I remembered — only a trifle more weather-beaten. The generous front yard was still surrounded by a woven wire fence stapled to ancient hedge posts. The wooden gate hung dilapidated and sagging on one hinge.

I slumped back into the seat as I surveyed the crumbling brick walk from the gate to the broad front porch where my family used to gather to catch the cool breeze on long hot summer evenings. I closed my eyes and let my memory continue on through the front door into the spacious dining room. Assembling place for many hungry threshing crews, it extended almost the full length of the house. On into the ample kitchen with it's cast iron sink and water pump in one corner. There was the massive black range my mother cooked on as she prepared great platters of juicy roast beef, piles of fried chicken, stacks of snowy mashed potatoes, baked beans, chocolate cakes, spicy apple pies, and gallons of hot coffee and iced tea.

From the dining room, one door led to my parents' bedroom, another to the parlor where, during the winter, the entire downstairs was heated by a huge base-burner, it's isinglass windows beaming out a cheery red glow. A narrow stairway led steeply to the unheated rooms upstairs where my brothers and I slept through the long frigid winter nights under piles of blankets.

How I wished I could wake once again to the serenade of hundreds of song-birds in the grove nearby. And hear once more the homey sounds of crowing roosters, cackling hens, bawling calves, and squealing pigs. I could almost hear my father calling the hogs to the feeding trough, "Wa-a-ie, wa-a-ie, — here pig, pig, pig."

I imagined I could smell again the tantalizing aroma of perking coffee, fresh biscuits, bacon frying in the kitchen. I caught a whiff of the pungent odor of fresh manure from the barnyard, then the breeze changed direction bringing the fragrance of apple, peach, and plum trees in bloom and the scent of wild flowers from the meadow.

I remembered the good times we had, how happy we were, how close as a family. Too, I knew now how poor we were, financially. So were our neighbors, but none of us knew it at that time. By today's standards, most of us were living below the poverty level. We never gave it a thought. We did the best we could, paid our debts, went to church on Sundays, lived within our means, worked hard and played when we had time.

My eyes opened with a start. The sun had gone down and soon it would be dark. I'm glad I saw the old place once more before the wreckers come, I thought.

Endplay Charlie Is Strutting His Stuff

Opening lead - queen of clubs.

Nobody ever contended that Endplay Charlie was a great player. His bidding was bad, his defense mediocre, and his dummy play — in general — left much to be desired.

But when it came to endplays, nobody could surpass Charlie. He could smell an endplay a mile away, and he was never happier than when he was executing one. This talent he had was really exceptional, and if the rest of his game had only been on a par with it, he would have ranked as the best player in the world.

Here is an example of Charlie strutting his stuff. Perhaps West shouldn't have doubled six spades — particularly with Endplay Charlie at the wheel — but West felt sure he had two trump tricks, so he did.

Charlie thereupon proceeded to wrap the contract right around his neck. Alerted by the double that West had all the missing trumps, Charlie held West to one trump trick.

He discarded a heart on the king of clubs and ruffed a club. After cashing the A-K of diamonds and ruffing a diamond, he trumped another club. Next he played the A-K of hearts and ruffed a heart, at which point this became the position:

Charlie now led the ace of clubs, ruffing it with the eight, then played the jack of diamonds. It did not matter which card West ruffed with — he could score only one trump trick.

Minister Had Full House

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday, I attended the third funeral in two months, and I promised myself I would not attend another whose services were conducted by this minister.

Each time I was trapped for over an hour with a preacher who started with the sins of Adam and Eve and worked his way through the New Testament.

He said nothing to comfort the family and made no mention of the deceased. Instead, he launched into a tirade, calling everyone present "sinners" and predicting that the world was going to hell because of its greed and selfishness. Then he wrapped it up with a pitch to raise money for the church's building campaign.

It was revolting!

People come to a funeral to pay their last respects to the deceased, not to be bawled out by the preacher or to be solicited for money.

What is your opinion of a minister who would take advantage of a full house in the above manner?

REVOLTED IN ROANOKE

DEAR REVOLTED: I think he's a short-sighted opportunist who believes in shooting the ducks while they're flying.

DEAR ABBY: My husband retired recently and found himself with very few pleasures and interests, so he bought a myna bird. Now he spends all his time teaching the bird dirty words and vulgar phrases.

Needless to say, a foul-talking myna bird is a source of much embarrassment when I have my bridge club meetings here. Also, it's a very bad example for my grandchildren who visit me often.

I have asked my husband to please get rid of that bird, but he refuses.

Please help me before I move in with my daughter and her family.

SERIOUS IN EUGENE, ORE.

DEAR SERIOUS: Don't move. Instead, move the bird to the garage, basement, attic or some out-of-the-way place where its X-rated monologue will not offend tender ears.

DEAR ABBY: I have this very dear friend I'll call "Agnes." She's alone, so I invite her to my home for dinner occasionally.

Agnes is the sweetest, most generous person I know, but she weights about 400 pounds, and when she plops herself down, she wrecks our furniture.

First she broke the springs in our new sofa. Another time, she broke my husband's favorite rocking chair. Fortunately, my husband is very handy, so he was able to repair the chair. However, he has instructed me to please invite Agnes OUT for dinner in the future because he's worried about our furniture.

I don't want to offend Agnes, but I don't want to take any more chances with our furniture.

Is there a solution?

AGNES' FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: Of course. Lucky you to have a husband who's handy with repairs. Ask him to reinforce one chair to accommodate Agens. Surely that isn't too much to do for the sweetest, most generous person you know.

DEAR ABBY: How can I break my husband of the habit of calling me "Mamma"? And are there other wives who dislike it as much as I do?

I don't mind his referring to be as "M'mma" when he talks to one of the children — for instance, "Go get Mamma."

But when he says to me, "Mamma, will you please hand me the paper?" it irritates me to no end!

I am NOT his Mamma. And I do not want him to call me "M'mma." If I had wanted to be his Mamma I would have adopted him, not married him.

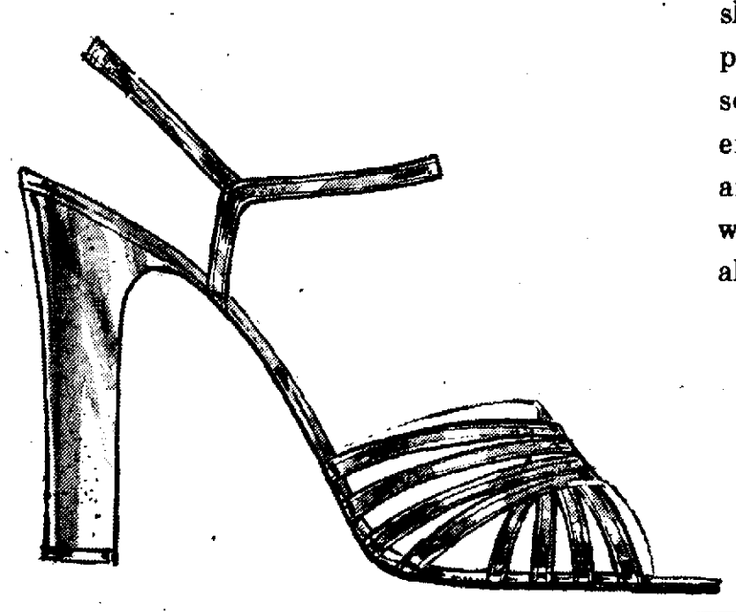

Will you please put this in your column? He reads you religiously and maybe it will take effect. Telling him hasn't helped.

NOT "MAMMA"

DEAR OT: Here's your letter. Now tape it to his bathroom mirror so he can see it every time he shaves.

'Dirty Dish' Worth Lots

London (AP) — This summer Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Alderman paid 80 pence — $1.64 — at a jumble sale for a moth-eaten velvet cape, a pair of rugby boots, an old army jacket and a "dirty little dish."

The dish sold at Sotheby's auction house for 9,000 pounds — $18,450.

It turned out to be a rare silver-gilt piece made in Paris during the reign of Louis XIV. Alderman, a civil servant in Kent, took the dish to Sotheby's after a jeweler friend recommended he do so.

Many Names For Halloween

Kansas City, Mo. (UPI) — Apples come by their association with Halloween naturally. The holiday originated as the Roman autumn festival of Pomona, goddess of the orchard.

Britain has three names for the occasion: All Hallow's Eve, All Hallow E'en and Nutcrack Night, in recognition of the role of roast chestnuts in the observance. On the Isle of Man, it is called Hogunnas and in Ireland, Oidhche Shamhna.

Community Living Program Provides Alternative To 50

By NANCY HICKS
Star Staff Writer

Six bodies, faces upward, stretched out on the brown tweed carpet, breathing slowing in . . . and out . . .

Six minds strolling gracefully through a green meadow, climbing a path upward to the crest of a tall hill. Then meeting someone at the top of that hill.

"But I couldn't find anyone. I looked, but no one was around. It was so lonely."

That was the beginning of a two-hour group therapy session for individuals with emotional problems, people with families, with jobs; but people with the kind of hurts and aches that can't be cured with a bandage or a surgeon's knife.

The group therapy session is one segment of the Community Living Program, a program that provides an alternative to institutionalization for more than 50 county residents.

The three-year-old Community Living Program, a service of the Lincoln-Lancaster Mental Health Clinic, operates out of an older two-story house at 2145 S. 13th St.

With 15 parttime and fulltime employes, the Community Living Program offers daily programs for 30 to 40 individuals with chronic emotional problems. These are people who have been in the state hospital and now need help getting back into society, need help learning how to deal with people again, explained Dr. Ron Breazeale, program director.

The chronic clients are divided into two groups: One group works on learning basic skills — to feel comfortable in groups and being around other people. In the second group, the emphasis is more on working through problems in a group setting, and there is more conventional use of therapy, psycho drama.

Chronic clients become involved in such areas as assertion training, problem solving, recreational therapy and crafts, and there is even an exercise group.

This day treatment program has its roots in a similar program for Regional Center clients which started about a decade ago in the boiler room on the Regional Center grounds.

"Just because a person is bent out of shape doesn't mean he has to go to a hospital and break up a home," said Dr. Breazeale.

These are people like you and me. They're like the people next door pretty much; they just have a few more problems, explained group leaders Jim Fuller and Nancy Forst.

Fuller and Ms. Forst run unstructured sessions focusing on individual problems.

One evening they spent more than half an hour working through the hostility one young man felt toward Nancy.

"This is a chance to try out differing ways of being in the world," explained Fuller. Expressing hostility in the group setting doesn't jeopardize job or home situations.

The two are adept at reading the nuances behind the words. One young woman repeatedly expressed fear over an upcoming date. She said she was scared of a new life style which included several new male friends.

But Fuller picked up on the inflection behind the words. "You say you're frightened, but it sounds to me like you are really excited."

"Yeah, that's right," the young woman answered.

Improvement is more noticeable within the acute program. Here many of the clients work through their problems and move on and out, able to deal with the world without supportive services.

The chronic program, for the most part, is a holding pattern, a maintenance program to provide daily activities until alternatives within the community can be found.

Clients in both programs are referred from the Regional Center, from the mental health clinic and from private psychiatrists.

And the fees for the program are based on ability to pay.

There is one walk-in patron, who pays nothing and, in fact, mooches room and board off the program. Cuddles, the large black and white cat, is a welcome and loving visitor at day-time programs and the evening sessions alike.

Presley Repays Dog World For Its Help

West Boylston, Mass. (UPI)—Elvis Presley, who started his fortune by singing about a "hound dog," is repaying the dog world for its help by lavishing money and medical care on his sick pet.

Presley's 10-month-old male chow, Getlo, recently spent more than two months at a veterinary hospital in this central Massachusetts community where he was treated for a near-fatal kidney ailment.

The dog spent the first few days at a posh Boston hotel and was personally cared for at the home of Dr. S. Lynn Kittleson, director of the New England Institute of Comparative Medicine.

When Getlo was discharged this week, he flew home to Memphis, Tenn., as the lone passenger on Presley's personal Lear jet, complete with two pilots.

The dog had been rushed to Boston by jet at 3 p.m. Aug. 12, when veterinarians "gave the dog a poor prognosis," said Kittleson.

Getlo was treated at the Copley Plaza Hotel for two days because veterinarians feared he couldn't make the 50-mile trip to West Boylston.

"The dog was in real bad shape when he came," she said. "We were even thinking about a kidney transplant or dialysis. But the dog now appears perfectly normal. He'll require only 15 minutes of treatment daily."

For the rest of his life, Getlo will have to have fluids injected into his body to prevent dehydration.

The veterinarian refused to discuss the cost of the treatment, but said, "This dog was treated very specially. I kept the dog home and kept it with me. He really required intensive care."

The dog's presence was kept secret for fear he might be harmed.

"We didn't want to tell anyone because we were afraid the farm would be mobbed and the dog be stolen and ransomed," said Dr. Robert J. Tashjian, the institute's president.

Why 15,000 Of The Little Devils?

Houston (UPI) — Bob Speca Jr. doesn't even like to play dominoes. So why does he have 15,000 of the little devils?

Why, to stand on end and knock over, of course.

What person has ever looked at a pile of small, rectangular blocks and been able to resist lining them up and toppling them over just to prove the domino theory is still sound?

Certainly not the 18-year-old Speca. What began as a high school math problem has turned into a unique, but somewhat out-of-hand, hobby.

The University of Pennsylvania freshman from the Philadelphia suburb of Broomall began with four boxes of dominoes three years ago to prove a math theory of infinite numbers.

He soon plans to set up and topple all 15,000 to break his own record of 11,111 dominoes, but his goal is far more ambitious.

"I hope to buy some land the size of a football field, put a building over it and put in a level glass floor," he explained. "Then I'm going to set up 1,111,-111 dominoes, a record no one will ever beat."

So here he is, crawling around a 400-square-foot platform on the third floor of a downtown department store, methodically setting up 5,500 dominoes just to watch them fall — and earn $500 for his appearance.

The line of dominoes stretched 15 feet in a straight line, then doubled back and over a ramp made of empty domino boxes and a thin yardstick. Then came a series of curves, short straightaways, more ramps, an intricate circle, a figure-eight, another circle and more curves and straights.

Six hours later, after several other false starts, Speca is ready.

He knelt next to his creation as the crowd counted down from 10.

Speca's index finger tapped the first domino and the theory was off and running, looking like a swift, black snake writhing across the floor. The crowd cheered each ramp, remained breath swallowingly quiet for each intricate circle and oohed the final eight parallel rows before the reaction ended with 28 ivory dominoes.

Not a domino remained standing. One youngster, whose eyes were wide with amazement, asked the domino wizard to do it again. Speca just smiled.

BRICK AND FRAME RANCH-STYLE HOME . . . atop underground reservoir.

(There's Nobody Home)

By LINDA OLIG
Star Staff Writer

Ever notice that impressive red brick house at 83rd and South?

It's apparently quite an affluent home in a nice neighborhood.

It has huge, white double doors with matching shutters and wrought iron fence, a shake shingle roof — even a fireplace that, judging from the outside, must be immence, impressive.

It looks so warm and homey . . . even the Avon lady would be tempted to ring the bell.

But don't knock, nobody's home.

Appearances can be misleading. Upon closer inspection a passerby can tell the house isn't the home it appears to be. It has no drapes (only Venetian blinds cover the windows), no tricycles in the driveway, no mail box, no garage. Replacing the usual swing set and garden patch in the backyard is a large blue/green tank.

The "house" houses pumping equipment for the Lincoln Water System.

It's there to regulate pressure of the tank's five million gallons of water destined for residences and businesses in southeast Lincoln.

Why such a fancy pumping station?

The water system and other local utilities use a variety of facades to hide their pumping, switching and regulating substations.

The goal is to make them blend in with the neighborhood "so they don't stick out like a sore thumb," said Lee Blocker, public utilities director.

While the house sandwiched between actual homes in the area of 83rd and South St. masks pumping equipment for an above ground storage reservoir, a striking brick and frame ranch at 77th and Vine sits alone on more than a city block . . . and practically atop a 10-million-gallon underground reseroir.

Before the mid 1960's when the water system began constructing home-like facilities, "pumping stations looked like pumping stations" or old railway stations, Blocker said, adding that few families want to live next door to such unappealing structures.

The Lincoln Water System currently has nine pumping stations. No two look alike; each is reflective of the area and era in which it was constructed. They run the gamut from the chunky brick buildings at 50th and Garland and 30th and W to the new, home-like buildings.

Lincoln Telephone and Telegraph's three residential switching stations also are designed to blend with the immediate geographic area, said Jim Vanderslice.

Two of the three do it well, indeed.

The oldest, right on the fringe of the Uni Place shopping area at 49th and Huntington, fits in fine, but is readily identified as a "Telephone Company" building, with the letters inscribed in marble over the doorway.

But those buildings at 48th and South and 27th and Old Cheney Rd. They're stumpers.

The 48th and South building, sitting on an immaculately landscaped lot, blends in so well with the residential and office area that many Lincolnites puzzle over its purpose. One time it appears to be a house; the other time a doctor's office.

The one on Old Cheney Rd., of contemporary design with no windows, looks like a physical plant for a nearby insurance office or a business office unto itself.

The three house switching equipment allowing telephones in one area of town to link up with those in other parts of the city or even the country.

"Environmental enhancement" also is the purpose behind masking outdoor equipment that regulates gas and electricity for distribution to homes and businesses.

The little, square brick structures like the one at 33rd and J? Those belong to Cengas. So do the free-standing pipes that pop out of the ground only to do an about-face and go back underground — witness the one south of the intersection of Cotner, Randolph and 56th St.

Lincoln Electric System recently jumped on the bandwagon, prettying up its substations, said Frank Grant.

While the regulatory equipment is all out in the open, LES is in the process of hiding the substations behind shrubs and fences, he said.

'Dirty Dish' Worth Lots

London (AP) — This summer Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Alderman paid 80 pence — $1.64 — at a jumble sale for a moth-eaten velvet cape, a pair of rugby boots, an old army jacket and a "dirty little dish."

The dish sold at Sotheby's auction house for 9,000 pounds — $18,450.

It turned out to be a rare silver-gilt piece made in Paris during the reign of Louis XIV. Alderman, a civil servant in Kent, took the dish to Sotheby's after a jeweler friend recommended he do so.

Many Names For Halloween

Kansas City, Mo. (UPI) — Apples come by their association with Halloween naturally. The holiday originated as the Roman autumn festival of Pomona, goddess of the orchard.

Britain has three names for the occasion: All Hallow's Eve, All Hallow E'en and Nutcrack Night, in recognition of the role of roast chestnuts in the observance. On the Isle of Man, it is called Hogunnas and in Ireland, Oidhche Shamhna.

BRICK AND FRAME RANCH-STYLE HOME . . . atop underground reservoir.

(There's Nobody Home)

By LINDA OLIG
Star Staff Writer

Ever notice that impressive red brick house at 83rd and South?

It's apparently quite an affluent home in a nice neighborhood.

It has huge, white double doors with matching shutters and wrought iron fence, a shake shingle roof — even a fireplace that, judging from the outside, must be immence, impressive.

It looks so warm and homey . . . even the Avon lady would be tempted to ring the bell.

But don't knock. nobody's home.

Appearances can be misleading. Upon closer inspection a passerby can tell the house isn't the home it appears to be. It has no drapes (only Venetian blinds cover the windows), no tricycles in the driveway, no mail box, no garage. Replacing the usual swing set and garden patch in the backyard is a large blue/green tank.

The "house" houses pumping equipment for the Lincoln Water System.

It's there to regulate pressure of the tank's five million gallons of water destined for residences and businesses in southeast Lincoln.

Why such a fancy pumping station?

The water system and other local utilities use a variety of facades to hide their pumping, switching and regulating substations.

The goal is to make them blend in with the neighborhood "so they don't stick out like a sore thumb," said Lee Blocker, public utilities director.

While the house sandwiched between actual homes in the area of 83rd and South St. masks pumping equipment for an above ground storage reservoir, a striking brick and frame ranch at 77th and Vine sits alone on more than a city block . . . and practically atop a 10-million-gallon underground reseroir.

Before the mid 1960's when the water system began constructing home-like facilities, "pumping stations looked like pumping stations" or old railway stations, Blocker said, adding that few families want to live next door to such unappealing structures.

The Lincoln Water System currently has nine pumping stations. No two look alike; each is reflective of the area and era in which it was constructed. They run the gamut, from the chunky brick buildings at 50th and Garland and 30th and W to the new, home-like buildings.

Lincoln Telephone and Telegraph's three residential switching stations also are designed to blend with the immediate geographic area, said Jim Vanderslice.

Two of the three do it well, indeed.

The oldest, right on the fringe of the Uni Place shopping area at 49th and Huntington, fits in fine, but is readily identified as a "Telephone Company" building, with the letters inscribed in marble over the doorway.

But those buildings at 48th and South and 27th and Old Cheney Rd. They're stumpers.

The 48th and South building, sitting on an immaculately landscaped lot, blends in so well with the residential and office area that many Lincolnites puzzle over its purpose. One time it appears to be a house; the other time a doctor's office.

The one on Old Cheney Rd., of contemporary design with no windows, looks like a physical plant for a nearby insurance office or a business office unto itself.

The three house switching equipment allowing telephones in one area of town to link up with those in other parts of the city or even the country.

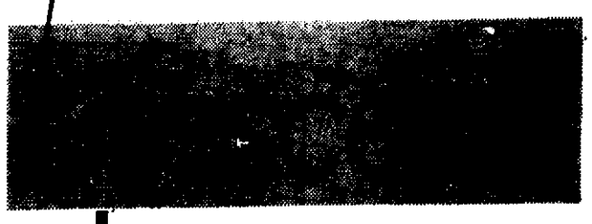

"Environmental enhancement" also is the purpose behind masking outdoor equipment that regulates gas and electricity for distribution to homes and businesses.

The little, square brick structures like the one at 33rd and J? Those belong to Cengas. So do the free-standing pipes that pop out of the ground only to do an about-face and go back underground — witness the one south of the intersection of Cotner, Randolph and 56th St.

Lincoln Electric System recently jumped on the bandwagon, prettying up its substations, said Frank Grant.

While the regulatory equipment is all out in the open, LES is in the process of hiding the substations behind shrubs and fences, he said.

$1,000 A Day Lost By Office

Wayne (AP) — The Region Four Office of Developmental Disabilitites is losing nearly $1,000 a day, but no budget cuts are expected, director Vince Scott said Tuesday.

The state organization serves retarded persons in northeast Nebraska.

Deficit spending, approved by the regional governing board at a Sept. 19 meeting, began because Gov. J. J. Exon "did not meet the mandate of the Legislature" by allocating the required amount of money to Region Four, Scott said.

The region will be "hurt very badly in many children's programs," but no programs will be eliminated, he said.

The office currently is spending appropriations meant for next year, while hoping that the legislature will take action in January to resolve the situation, the director said.

Currency Is Devalued

Santiago (AP) — Chile's, central bank announced the 22nd devaluation of the countrys' currency with a change in the exchange effective immediately from 6.90 pesos to 7.10 pesos per U.S. dollar.

S. 1 is a new, top-secret, jet fighter. Right?

Wrong. S. 1 is Senate Bill 1, officially titled The Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1975.

S. 1 is the answer to a crying need to modernize the archaic criminal code. Right?

Wrong, according to Frank Wilkinson, executive director of the National Committee Against Repressive Legislation (NCARL), in Lincoln for several speaking engagements on the University of Nebraska campus Wednesday.

Wilkinson states emphatically that, "We need a new criminal code. Title 18 (the present code) is filled with numerous redundancies and it was last indexed in 1909. Unfortunately, S. 1, a bill co-sponsored by Nebraska Sen. Roman Hruska, isn't the new code some people might think it is."

The bill, 753 pages long in its completed form, contains "seven pages which have caused more controversy than the other 746," Wilkinson said.

Those pages deal with the section on secrecy which "expands the scope and severity of criminal sanctions to enforce the administrative classification of documents . . . stops any further Pentagon Papers," according to an NCARL statement on the bill.

"The press is finally becoming aware of the ramifications of this measure and speaking out editorically," Wilkinson said, noting that the first such piece appeared in the Wall Street Journal, just recently, a fact which is most startling when one realizes that S. 1 is the final result of processes which began nine years ago.

The whole matter of revising the criminal code was "off to a good start," Wilkinson said, when President Lyndon Johnson appointed a 12-member bipartisan committee to do the work. This group, headed by former California Governor Pat Brown came to be known as the Brown Commission.

In January, 1971, they completed their job and handed the report to then president Richard Nixon, Wilkinson said.

Nixon rejected the bi-partisan report, he continued, and turned the whole thing over to then attorney general John Mitchell, asking him to re-write it according to "my (Nixon's) concern for law and order."

Mitchell left his post to join the committee to re-elect Nixon and the whole thing was dumped on Richard Kleindienst, the successor to Mitchell.

In March 1973 the Nixon-Mitchell-Kleindienst "thing" was released, Wilkinson said, "and two weeks later Mitchell was indicted."

The press focus was turned away from the criminal reform issue by the presence of Watergate and talk of impeachment until May of this year, Wilkinson said.

"This thing has been changed so many times that even one of the original co-sponsors has recently denounced it," he continued, noting a recent letter from that co-sponsor, former Senator Sam Irvin, to the Los Angeles Times.

That letter, dated October 5, 1975, read, in part:

"S. 1, in its present form, is simply atrocious and would establish what is essentially a police state . . ."

Wilkinson and NCARL contend that S. 1 is "unamendable."

"The whole thing needs to be scrapped and started over from scratch," he added. "Amending of bills is what got us such things as no-knock and wire tapping, things we have to contend with in today's justice."

"It will take nothing short of a miracle to get this thing stopped in the Senate," he said.

Committee Investigating Covert Activities 'Risks'

©The New York Times

Washington — The House Select Committee on Intelligence is in the midst of a closed-door investigation into what its chairman has termed the "risks" posed by undercover intelligence operations carried out by American agencies both in this country and overseas.

Rep. Otis G. Pike, who heads the 13-member committee, has declined to specify the covert activities are being examined, except to say that his panel is "discussing risk, from the risk of violating individuals rights of citizens to the risk of war."

Committee sources have confirmed, however, that one area of concern is secret American intelligence-gathering forays aimed at unfriendly nations that might, if discovered or acknowledged by the United States, prompt a diplomatic or even a military reaction.

Submarines Used

One of the chief objects of the panel's attention, these sources said, has been this country's use, principally against the Soviet Union, of specially equipped submarines manned by both Navy and intelligence-agency personnel, to gather photographic, electronic and other kinds of informatin. The sources said that some of these missions have been conducted within the 12-mile ocean frontier claimed by the Soviet Union.

The committee is also understood to be interested in the extent of the control exercised over the planning and execution of such missions by the Natinal Security Council and its "40 Committee," which is responsible for approving major proposals for covert action.

The New York Times and other newspapers have reported in recent months that some of the American submarines conducting undersea intelligence missions, known by such code names as Holystone, Pinnacle and Bollard, have escaped, sometimes narrowly, after colliding with hostile vessels and, in at least one case, running aground off the Soviet coast.

Soviets Aware

The Times quoted an intelligence source as having said that Soviet leaders were aware of the underwater intelligence operations, and other sources noted that, after one of the bumping incidents, the Soviet Union had launched a full-scale air air and sea search for the American submarine involved.

House committee sources said that the panel was briefed earlier this month on some of the operations by Rear Adm. Bobby Inman, director of naval intelligence. The admiral's presentation was described as apparently full and forthright, but no details of his testimony could be learned.

However, other intelligence sources provided some details of American underwater reconnaissance missions that, they said, raised questions about the advisability of such operations in view of the risks they posed.

A spokesman for William E. Colby, the director of central intelligence, said when asked about the sources' accounts, "This sort of thing is just not discussed."

Coast Approached

In some instances, according to two sources, Navy submarines taking part in so-called "denied-area operations" run by the Central Intelligence Agency have approached the Soviet coast in the process of putting American agents ashore there.

It is not known whether such "humaint" missions — the acronym stands for "human intelligence" — brought the submarines closer to land than three miles, the international limit recognized by the United States.

Although official regulations are said to forbid submarines on intelligence missions to venture within four nautical miles of the Soviet coast, two former intelligence officials insisted that some American operations had taken place inside the three-mile limit.

Submarine Crosses Limit

In one such instance — referred to by two sources and not discounted by a third — an American submarine, probably a nuclear-powered vessel of the Sturgeon class, slipped across the three-mile limit in the Sea of Japan and into the harbor in Vladivostok.

The sources said the submarine had stopped long enough for technicians to attach a device, probably a small but powerful transmitter, to an underwater cable linking the port's military facilities with Moscow.

Soon, the sources said, machines 7,000 miles to the east, at the headquarters of the National Security Agency at Ft. Meade, Md., began to record conversations between Soviet duty officers and clerks in Vladivostok and their counterparts in Moscow.

Undersea Cables Tapped

Other sources, while unaware of the alleged foray into Vladivostok harbor, confirmed that the United States had developed and used technology that permits the "tapping" of undersea cables.

The NSA has had relatively little success in recent years in deciphering the computer-scrambled radio transmissions of the Soviet Union and other advanced nations, and that frustration has increased the attractiveness of "plugging into" surface telephone or telegraph lines considered secure enough to carry unscrambled communications.

One of the sources who claimed familiarity with the Valdivostok operation said, however, that most of the information picked up by the device was innocuous. "Occasionally," the source said, "you'd hear that they were going to assign more men to some battery, or some such thing."

Hunger Strike At City Jail Is Over

By GORDON WINTERS
Star Staff Writer

A hunger strike by about 70 to 75 prisoners in the City Jail ended Tuesday after two meals were refused.

Police Chief George Hansen said inmates said the main issue was the serving of cold sandwiches and soup at evening meals three or four nights a week.

Hansen said he believes it would be more appropriate to serve the cold meal at noon than in the evening and that he plans to implement such a change.

Inspector Robert Myers, who is in charge of the jail, said inmates also requested other changes in writing about two weeks ago. Some changes, such as switching from the background music piped into cells to a popular radio station, have been done, Myers said.

Another area where inmates requested changes, he said, was in visitation policies. Inmates now can be visited by attorneys, counselors and ministers at any time.

Immediate family members can visit county prisoners and city prisoners twice a week. Prisoners being held in the jail on federal charges can be visited once a week.

If a prisoner has no immediate family members who can visit him, for whatever reason, no other person may be the visitor under long-standing policy, Myers said.

Myers said the policy is being reviewed. He noted that a scarcity of facilities — the jail has only seven phones — place restrictions on visiting policies.

Myers said that police have no authority under law to institute some of the requested changes. He said police cannot cut "good time" from a prisoner's sentence if he works in the jail.

Police, Myers said, cannot give a work-release prisoner permission to go home on holidays.

Hansen said a number of moves to alter conditions in the jail were underway before the hunger strike.

He said a shower and delousing unit is being installed to clean prisoners before they are placed in cell blocks.

He said heating elements are being installed in carts that carry prisoners their food. In the meantime, he said, the number of meals carried at one time will be reduced so meals do not cool before arriving in the cells.

Clothing is also being purchased to give to prisoners who have no relatives or other means to get a change of clothes while they are in jail, Hansen said.

Karnopp Won't Attend Any More Meetings

A city and county review of police and sheriff policies is nothing more than a "witch hunt," said County Sheriff Merle Karnopp Tuesday afternoon.

The sheriff, who attended the first joint meeting of the City Council and County Board, has said he will not attend any more meetings on the policy review, though he will answer questions on his office's policies directed to him by letter.

The review into law enforcement procedures was started after the shooting death of Sherdell Lewis by a deputy sheriff during a drug search.

But the two governments decided to look only into policies and practices and not into the shooting incident itself.

Comments made during the review meetings were meant to "embarrass and degrade" the sheriff, Karnopp said.

A deputy sheriff who attended the Monday afternoon City-County Common meeting taped the two-hour meeting using a tape recorder hidden inside of a brief case, the sheriff verified.

Derrogatory comments about the sheriff's office made at a previous meeting did not appear in the minutes of the meeting, Karnopp said. The department merely wanted to know exactly what was said during the review, he said.

The sheriff said he is not opposed to policy changes within his department if these changes will "make a better department."

The department hopes to join with the city police in a new new in-service training program for all officers, Karnopp said. The training sessions which will cover such topics as self defense, awareness, maritial dispute confrontations, will probably begin next year.

Sidewalk Surf Is Rising Again

By The Associated Press

The sidewalk surf is up again after a 10-year hiatus. Skateboards are back.

"It feels best when you go real fast," said 9-year-old Craig Ott, as he tucked his skateboard under his arm and ran up a hill near New York City's Prospect Park.

He started his descent, the wheels of his board whirring as they scraped the smoky city pavement. He maneuvered the board with his body, allowing it to swerve up an embankment. Finally, he straightened his body. As the board slowed, he jumped off.

"See, there's nothing to it. Just keep your balance . . ."

There are lots of people just keeping their balance these days.

From its start in California, skateboarding is rolling slowly east, hitting coastal towns first because most surfboard stores also stock skateboards. In fact, skateboards originally were an offshoot of surfing.

In 1965 when the skateboard mania peaked, about 50 million boards had been sold. A year later it was all over. Now, about 50 manufacturers are producing over half a million boards per week. National skateboard associations are popping up and championship meets are being staged in some of the nation's largest sports arenas.

"It's here to stay now, and it's a legitimate sport," said Jim O'Mahoney, publisher of Skateboard Magazine, and a member of the U.S. Skateboard Association.

"It's a multimillion-dollar business today. It was only about half a million 10 years ago," he said.

Sports and department stores in some of the nation's major cities — and especially in California where the sport is most popular — also say business is booming.

"A year ago, I was selling maybe half a dozen a week," said Larry Mages, secretary-treasurer of Morrie Mages Sports in Chicago. "Now I'm ordering boards every week. Sales have increased more than 100 per cent."

The skateboard renaissance is the result of modern technolgy: the creation of the urethane plastic wheel.

Compared with the clay deposit wheel used on the wooden boards of a decade ago, the urethane and modified polyurethane wheel, when teamed with fiberglass, aluminum and molded plastic boards, provides a more versatile ride.

"There are steel bearings, hydraulic suspensions — it's a highly tuned skateboard," O'Mahoney said. The boards range in price from $10 to $40; come in a variety of colors and run between 24 and 29 inches.

This is more than they were in 1965, but then the skateboard today is faster and more flexible. Speeds go as high as 40 miles per hour, according to enthusiasts.

"It's a whole new sport," says Ron Antonelli, a 30-year-old draftsman who plans to enter the freestyle, slalom and cross-country events at the upcoming pro-skateboard competition in Los Angeles.

"There are a lot more possibilities," he said, "like high speed turning, gripping on banked walls and vertical walls. My fastest speed has been 35 m.p.h."

Antonelli and other skaters who pursued the sport in the late 1960s gave it up when the challenge died out, he said.

The biggest thrill today is "riding pools." The urethane wheel allows the rider to virtually defy gravity by climbing up the side of an empty swimming pool. It's like riding a giant wave because the skater has to be able to shoot about eight feet up a near-vertical wall and then careen down after horizontally hugging the wall for a split second.

Children as young as 5 and 4 are attempting this feat. They also ride the boards on their hands, ride several boards stacked on one another, dance, jump and leap.

Statistics on skateboard accidents are not yet available from the National Safety Council, but Jack Dimon, a former USSA representative, said he's made four trips to the hospital in the last few months for his two oldest sons. "We advocate the use of helmets," he said. "They're just being made, because the market is in an embryonic stage."

Some cities such as San Diego have banned skateboards from sidewalks. The California Highway Patrol is even issuing citations for skateboarders who violate the right-of-way of motorists and pedestrians.

Those skateboarders who participate in the Los Angeles competition race on a ramp that runs 150 feet in the air. They will be required to wear arm and knee pads and helmets.

"Doctors in California have a new term: skateboard fracture," said O'Mahoney of Skateboard Magazine. "But a lot of accidents are caused by parents jumping on boards and saying: 'Oh, that's easy.' It's like jumping on a bar of soap."

A LITTLE SUPPORT . . . for tandem traveller's in Eugene, Ore.

Malaysia Seeking Improved Trade

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Seventeen months after formally establishing diplomatic relations with China, Malaysia still is looking for an improvement in trade and an easing of Peking's support for 2,000 Communist guerrillas seeking to oust the government here.

Malaysian officials say that when the agreement was signed with Peking on May 31, 1974, the Chinese agreed not to interfere in the internal affairs of this Southeast Asian nation.

But, officials here say, the radio of the Malayan Communist party — the Voice of the Malayan Revolution (VOMR) — is broadcasting now from Yunnan in southern China.

The officials add that there has been no significant reduction in propaganda from VOMR and some diplomats keeping track of its broadcasts say it has increased its propaganda rather than decreased it.

Malaysians are forbidden, by decree, to listen to these broadcasts.

On April 30 Radio Peking featured a commentary criticizing the Malaysian government of Prime Minister Tun Abdul Razak and praising the Malaysian Communists as the only group fighting for the people.

"We had no agreement with China for the switching-off of the VOMR. But it is one thing for VOMR to say something and quite another thing for the official government radio of China to say all those nasty things," said a senior Malaysian official.

He added there was little Malaysia could do if the Peking radio continued it's hostile comments.

China has given moral support to the local Communists but has never supplied it with arms, Malaysian officials said.

As for the other issue, there has not been any great reduction in the trade gap between the two countries, and in fact the gap is likely to increase further in China's favor, said some diplomats.

In the January to May period this year, Malaysia sold only $13.3 million worth of goods to China and imported $52 million worth. For the same period last year it was $45 million in exports and $60 million in imports.

During 1974, Malaysia as a whole imported $190 million worth compared to $146 million in 1973. Exports in 974 for Malaysia to China were $84 million while in 1973 it was $78 million.

In previous years, too, the balance has been greatly in China's favor with Malaysia importing mainly foodstuffs while exporting natural rubber.

Malasian officials, however, say they don't think these issues will lead to breakup of relations and Malaysia still hopes China will import more and stop interfering in Malaysia's affairs.

Malaysia follows a nonaligned course and favors neutralization of Southeast Asia. Officials maintain the country could not follow those paths without relations with China.

Nation Accumulates Money For Home Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's savings and loan institutions managed to accumulate additional money for home loans during September despite fears that government borrowing activities would drain the institutions, a government report showed Tuesday.

And Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman Garth Marston said sample data to date indicates a substantial recovery for early October.

The bank board said new deposits at federally insured savings and loans exceeded withdrawals by $618 million. That was a drop from net new savings of $1.3 billion in August.

But, together with the projected substantial increase for this month, the figures indicated that home builders and buyers weathered without serious problems what some economists had feared would be a threat to the so-far modest recovery in the industry.

Savings and loan institutions provide the bulk of loans for home buyers, but historically have sustained outflows of money when interest rates on government securities rise to the 8% level or higher, prompting depositors to withdraw their savings to get better yields.

During September, the Treasury sold $5 billion in notes.

Texans To Give 'Punkin' Money

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — Officials are promoting the idea of "punkin' money," coupons redeemable for candy, as one way of reducing the risk while keeping the fun in Halloween trick-or-treating.

Others are urging youngsters not to go outside at all on Halloween.

What parents and civic leaders fear is another poisoning case like the one last year in which a father was convicted of killing his 8-year-old son with trick-or-treat candy laced with cyanide.

Memories of that October horror story linger in the Houston area where officials are encouraging youngsters to go to carnivals, parties or just stay home instead of going door-to-door. "There are just too many nuts out there to risk it any more," said one father.

The Houston suburbs of Bellaire, Missouri City, El Lago and La Porte have officially discouraged trick-or-treating. In Deer Park, where O'Bryan lived, a city carnival for some 2,000 children is planned.

Other officials, who believe the trick-or-treat tradition is too deeply ingrained to stop altogether, are promoting the idea of collecting "punkin' money."

Mrs. Pate Nufer, a Houston mother, suggested the idea.

Several Houston chain stores agreed and are printing sheets of 5-cent and 2-cent coupons which will be handed out to children instead of candy. The coupons can be redeemed at stores for "anything but cigarettes and beer," said Mrs. Nufer.

"I dreamed up 'punkinickels' for 5-cent denominations and 'punkinduals' for 2-cent coupons," she said. "I think it sounds better than telling kids they're trick or treating for paper."

Homes participating in the coupon system will post a picture of "Jolly Jack O'Lantern."

The plan is being promoted by the Houston area Jaycees who hope up to 200,000 elementary children in Harris County will participate.

Mrs. Nufer said she believes the program will "keep the fun in Halloween, but take the fear out."

Ronald C. O'Bryan, the 30-year-old man convicted in the case that triggered the trick-or-treat reforms, will spend this Halloween on Huntsville's death row where 26 other inmates call him "the candy man."

A Houston jury last June found O'Bryan guilty of killing his son to collect more than $30,000 in life insurance. Testimony revealed he distributed five packages of poisoned candy during a trick-or-treat outing. He gave one each to his son and to his daughter.

Young Timothy was the only child to sample the candy and an autopsy showed the youngster ate enough cyanide to kill several people.

O'Bryan lives by himself in a small cell with little to occupy his time, his attorney said. O'Bryan has been visited by his father and brother, but not by his wife who testified against him at the trial.

The case is under appeal and O'Bryan's attorney said his client "is still professing his innocence" and "still has faith in the system of justice."

$1,000 A Day Lost By Office

Wayne (AP) — The Region Four Office of Developmental Disabilities is losing nearly $1,000 a day, but no budget cuts are expected, director Vince Scott said Tuesday.

The state organization serves retarded persons in northeast Nebraska.

Deficit spending, approved by the regional governing board at a Sept. 19 meeting, began because Gov. J. J. Exon "did not meet the mandate of the Legislature" by allocating the required amount of money to Region Four, Scott said.

The region will be "hurt very badly in many children's programs," but no programs will be eliminated, he said.

The office currently is spending appropriations meant for next year, while hoping that the legislature will take action in January to resolve the situation, the director said.

Criminal Code Revision Blasted

By J.L. SCHMIDT
Star Staff Writer

S. 1 is a new, top-secret, jet fighter. Right?

Wrong. S. 1 is Senate Bill 1, officially titled The Criminal Justice Reform Act of 1975.

S. 1 is the answer to a crying need to modernize the archaic criminal code. Right?

Wrong, according to Frank Wilkinson, executive director of the National Committee Against Repressive Legislation (NCARL), in Lincoln for several speaking engagements on the University of Nebraska campus Wednesday.

Wilkinson states emphatically that, "We need a new criminal code. Title 18 (the present code) is filled with numerous redundancies and it was last indexed in 1909. Unfortunately, S. 1, a bill co-sponsored by Nebraska Sen. Roman Hruska, isn't the new code some people might think it is."

The bill, 753 pages long in its completed form, contains "seven pages which have caused more controversy than the other 746," Wilkinson said.

Those pages deal with the section on secrecy which "expands the scope and severity of criminal sanctions to enforce the administrative classification of documents . . . stops any further Pentagon Papers," according to an NCARL statement on the bill.

"The press is finally becoming aware of the ramifications of this measure and speaking out editorically," Wilkinson said, noting that the first such piece appeared in the Wall Street Journal, just recently, a fact which is most startling when one realizes that S. 1 is the final result of processes which began nine years ago.

The whole matter of revising the criminal code was "off to a good start," Wilkinson said, when President Lyndon Johnson appointed a 12-member bipartisan committee to do the work. This group, headed by former California Governor Pat Brown came to be known as the Brown Commission.

In January, 1971, they completed their job and handed the report to then president Richard Nixon, Wilkinson said.

Nixon rejected the bi-partisan report, he continued, and turned the whole thing over to then attorney general John Mitchell, asking him to re-write it according to "my (Nixon's) concern for law and order."

Mitchell left his post to join the committee to re-elect Nixon and the whole thing was dumped on Richard Kleindienst, the successor to Mitchell.

In March 1973 the Nixon-Mitchell-Kleindienst "thing" was released, Wilkinson said, "and two weeks later Mitchell was indicted."

The press focus was turned away from the criminal reform issue by the presence of Watergate and talk of impeachment until May of this year, Wilkinson said.

"This thing has been changed so many times that even one of the original co-sponsors has recently denounced it," he continued, noting a recent letter from that co-sponsor, former Senator Sam Irvin, to the Los Angeles Times.

That letter, dated October 8, 1975, read, in part:

"S. 1, in its present form, is simply atrocious and would establish what is essentially a police state . . ."

Wilkinson and NCARL contend that S. 1 is "unamendable."

"The whole thing needs to be scrapped and started over from scratch," he added. "Amending of bills is what got us such things as no-knock and wire tapping, things we have to contend with in today's justice."

"It will take nothing short of a miracle to get this thing stopped in the Senate," he said.

Committee Investigating Covert Activities 'Risks'

©The New York Times

Washington — The House Select Committee on Intelligence is in the midst of a closed-door investigation into what its chairman has termed the "risks" posed by undercover intelligence operations carried out by American agencies both in this country and overseas.

Rep. Otis G. Pike, who heads the 13-member committee, has declined to specify the covert activities are being examined, except to say that his panel is "discussing risk, from the risk of violating individuals rights of citizens to the risk of war."

Committee sources have confirmed, however, that one area of concern is secret American intelligence-gathering forays aimed at unfriendly nations that might, if discovered or acknowledged by the United States, prompt a diplomatic or even a military reaction.

Submarines Used

One of the chief objects of the panel's attention, these scurces said, has been this country's use, principally against the Soviet Union, of specially equipped submarines manned by both Navy and intelligence-agency personnel, to gather photographic, electronic and other kinds of informatin. The sources said that some of these missions have been conducted within the 12-mile ocean frontier claimed by the Soviet Union.

The committee is also understood to be interested in the extent of the control exercised over the planning and execution of such missions by the Natinal Security Council and its "40 Committee," which is responsible for approving major proposals for covert action.

The New York Times and other newspapers have reported in recent months that some of the American submarines conducting undersea intelligence missions, known by such code names as Holystone, Pinnacle and Bollard, have escaped, sometimes narrowly, after colliding with hostile vessels and, in at least one case, running aground off the Soviet coast.

Soviets Aware

The Times quoted an intelligence source as having said that Soviet leaders were aware of the underwater intelligence operations, and other sources noted that, after one of the bumping incidents, the Soviet Union had launched a full-scale air air and sea search for the American submarine invoived.

House committee sources said that the panel was briefed earlier this month on some of the operations by Rear Adm. Bobby Inman, director of naval intelligence. The admiral's presentation was described as apparently full and forthright, but no details of his testimony could be learned.

However, other intelligence sources provided some details of American underwater reconnaissance missions that, they said, raised questions about the advisability of such operations in view of the risks they posed.

A spokesman for William E. Colby, the director of central intelligence, said when asked about the sources' accounts, "This sort of thing is just not discussed."

Coast Approached

In some instances, according to two sources, Navy submarines taking part in so-called "denied-area operations" run by the Central Intelligence Agency have approached the Soviet coast in the process of putting American agents ashore there.

It is not known whether such "humaint" missions — the acrobym stands for "human intelligence" — brought the submarines closer to land than three miles, the international limit recognized by the United States.

Although official regulations are said to forbid submarines on intelligence missions to venture within four nautical miles of the Soviet coast, two former intelligence officials insisted that some American operations had taken place inside the three-mile limit.

Submarine Crosses Limit

In one such instance — referred to by two sources and not discounted by a third — an American submarine, probably a nuclear-powered vessel of the Sturgeon class, slipped across the three-mile limit in the Sea of Japan and into the harbor in Vladivostok.

The sources said the submarine had stopped long enough for technicians to attach a device, probably a small but powerful transmitter, to an underwater cable linking the port's military facilities with Moscow.

Soon, the sources said, machines 7,000 miles to the east, at the headquarters of the National Security Agency at Ft. Meade, Md., began to record conversations between Soviet duty officers and clerks in Vladivostok and their counterparts in Moscow.

Undersea Cables Tapped

Other sources, while unaware of the alleged foray into Vladivostok harbor, confirmed that the United States had developed and used technology that permits the "tapping" of undersea cables.

The NSA has had relatively little success in recent years in deciphering the computer-scrambled radio transmissions of the Soviet Union and other advanced nations, and that frustration has increased the attractiveness of "plugging into" surface telephone or telegraph lines considered secure enough to carry unscrambled communications.

One of the sources who claimed familiarity with the Valdivostok operation said, however, that most of the information picked up by the device was innocuous. "Occasionally," the source said, "you'd hear that they were going to assign more men to some battery, or some such thing."

I visited the Chet Ager Nature Center at Pioneers Park Oct. 12 and was appalled to see dead fish in the ponds and fish trying to swim in such shallow water that their backs were exposed. Can't water be pumped in there or something else be done?

—Diane Schroeder, Lincoln

ACTION LINE; It's not nice to fool Mother Nature, so the margarine television commercial tells us, and that's part of the explanation for what you saw at the Chet Ager Nature Center. Parks and Recreation Dept. Director Dick Hillugs said the center is supoosed to exhibit natural life cycles, which includes the death of fish in a drought period. The fish either will be replaced or will replace themselves in wetter weather, he said. Like a lot of Lincolnites, the fish also are suffering from high water rates. Hilligus said it's just too expensive to pump city water into the ponds.

ACTION UPDATE: A reader in last Wednesday's ACTION LINE asked for help settling a complaint against Martin Roofing Co., formerly of 5736 Judson. The Lincoln Better Business Bureau reported at that time having had several unresolved complaints against Orville Martin, the firm's owner, and said the agency believed he was no longer operating in the Capital City. The BBB now has learned that Martin Roofing is still in business in Lincoln and can supply the firm's address and telephone number to anyone requesting that information.

Where can I get sourvenir or commemorative plates of Lincoln?

—Collector, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: It seems that the plate is pretty clean of any souvenir or commemorative plates solely about Lincoln. At least two Capital City firms, Gulley's of 301 So. 13th St. and The Fun Shop of 1411 O St., sell commemorative plates of Nebraska. The plates show scenes of the Nebraska Capitol and other features of the state. Representatives of both stores said they had never heard of any plates only about Lincoln.

When and where are public health nurses available? What services do they perform besides taking blood pressure?

—A.M., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Public health nurses perform a wide variety of services including immunization, blood pressure tests, disease screening, home nursing and hearing and vision examination,s according to Mrs. Lela Watts, health educator for the Lincoln-Lancaster County Health Dept. These services are available at the department's main office at 2200 St. Mary's Ave., Havelock School at 6224 Logan and the central branch office at 2617 Y St. weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Public health nurses also work at 23 locations around the city once a week. The location closest to you is at the Havelock YWCA, 4332 No. 62nd St. Hours are 1:30-4 p.m. Mondays. Lincolnites in other areas can call the health dept. to find out the location nearest them.

Sixth graders in our area now attend Goodrich Junior High. Other sixth graders across town attend an elementary school. My concern is that kids are not ready to go into junior high at age 10 or 11. I've heard rumors that there's room for them to go to Belmont Elementary School. If anything going to be done about this?

—Mrs. H., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: You'll have a chance soon to make your opinion known to school district officials, according to John Prasch, Lincoln schools superintendent. Prasch said the district is planning to survey residents of your area about whether sixth graders should continue attending Goodrich Junior High. Crowded conditions at Belmont and a desire to see how well a "middle school" attended by sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth graders would work are the reasons why sixth graders attend Goodrich, he said. Prasch noted that the experiment has been successful and that most parents have been pleased with the arrangement.

I've heard that some of the Vietnamese refugees living in Lincoln are on county welfare now. Is this true? I don't think it's right that our tax dollars be spent on this. These people are the responsibility of the sponsors who brought them to town.

—Angry Taxpayer, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Don Williamson, Lancaster County Welfare Dept. deputy director, said there are "some" Vietnamese in Lincoln receiving welfare assistance, but it's part of a federal program and does not involve local tax money. The qualifications are about the same as for county assistance. The program is limited to registered aliens. Of course, you're still paying for the program through federal tax dollars.

I sent a check for $160 for auto insurance to the Criterion Insurance Co. of Washington, D.C., Aug. 18. I never received a receipt so I wrote them again Sept. 30. They have not answered my letter. What can you do?

—Ward Hill, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Mrs. Barbara McCallup, customer service representative for Criterion Insurance Co., 1705 L St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036, said your check was received in late August and paid in full your auto insurance premium until Aug. 1, 1976. She said that you should have been sent some sort of receipt, but that your canceled check also serves as proof of payment.

Hunger Strike At City Jail Is Over

By GORDON WINTERS
Star Staff Writer

A hunger strike by about 70 to 75 prisoners in the City Jail ended Tuesday after two meals were refused.

Police Chief George Hansen said inmates said the main issue was the serving of cold sandwiches and soup at evening meals three or four nights a week.

Hansen said he believes it would be more appropriate to serve the cold meal at noon than in the evening and that he plans to implement such a change.

Inspector Robert Myers, who is in charge of the jail, said inmates also requested other changes in writing about two weeks ago. Some changes, such as switching from the background music piped into cells to a popular radio station, have been done, Myers said.

Another area where inmates requested changes, he said, was in visitation policies. Inmates now can be visited by attorneys, counselors and ministers at any time.

Immediate family members can visit county prisoners and city prisoners twice a week. Prisoners being held in the jail on federal charges can be visited once a week.

If a prisoner has no immediate family members who can visit him, for whatever reason, no other person may be the visitor under long-standing policy, Myers said.

Myers said the policy is being reviewed. He noted that a scarcity of facilities — the jail has only seven phones — place restrictions on visiting policies.

Myers said that police have no authority under law to institute some of the requested changes. He said police cannot cut "good time" from a prisoner's sentence if he works in the jail.

Police, Myers said, cannot give a work-release prisoner permission to go home on holidays.

Hansen said a number of moves to alter conditions in the jail were underway before the hunger strike.

He said a shower and delousing unit is being installed to clean prisoners before they are placed in cell blocks.

He said heating elements are being installed in carts that carry prisoners their food. In the meantime, he said, the number of meals carried at one time will be reduced so meals do not cool before arriving in the cells.

Clothing is also being purchased to give to prisoners who have no relatives or other means to get a change of clothes while they are in jail, Hansen said.

Karnopp Won't Attend Any More Meetings

A city and county review of police and sheriff policies is nothing more than a "witch hunt," said County Sheriff Merle Karnopp Tuesday afternoon.

The sheriff, who attended the first joint meeting of the City Council and County Board, has said he will not attend any more meetings on the policy review, though he will answer questions on his office's policies directed to him by letter.

The review into law enforcement procedures was started after the shooting death of Sherdell Lewis by a deputy sheriff during a drug search.

But the two governments decided to look only into policies and practices and not into the shooting incident itself.

Comments made during the review meetings were meant to "embarrass and degrade" the sheriff, Karnopp said.

A deputy sheriff who attended the Monday afternoon City-County Common meeting taped the two-hour meeting using a tape recorder hidden inside of a brief case, the sheriff verified.

Derrogatory comments about the sheriff's office made at a previous meeting did not appear in the minutes of the meeting, Karnopp said. The department merely wanted to know exactly what was said during the review, he said.

The sheriff said he is not opposed to policy changes within his department if these changes will "make a better department."

The department hopes to join with the city police in a new new in-service training program for all officers, Karnopp said. The training sessions which will cover such topics as self defense, awareness, maritial dispute confrontations, will probably begin next year.

Conservation Awards Set

Four persons will receive awards for their outstanding efforts in promoting and practicing conservation at the annual awards banquet of the Lower Platte South Natural Resources District.

L. K. Emry, 3725 N. 63rd, will be cited for his educational programs on conservation and flood control. Harold Simmons, Lincoln Journal reporter, will receive a citation for his reporting on natural resource topics.

John Ficke of Milford will receive an award for conservation accomplishments on his 240-acre farm, and Carl Erickson, 3415 L St., will receive a special award.

William Erwin, former undersecretary for rural affairs, U.S. Department of Agriculture, will be the guest speaker at the banquet, which is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. Nov. 6, at the Villager Motel in Lincoln. The public is invited to attend.

Malone Council Will Hear Chief

Lincoln Police Chief George Hansen will be one of three speakers at the Malone Neighborhood Council meeting Thursday night.

The discussion will center around cultural awareness in the public schools. Other speakers will be Gerry Henderson, city Human Rights Officer, and Leola Bullock, from the Concerned Citizens for Truth in Education.

The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m. at the Malone Center.

Sidewalk Surf Is Rising Again

By The Associated Press

The sidewalk surf is up again after a 10-year hiatus. Skateboards are back.

"It feels best when you go real fast," said 9-year-old Craig Ott, as he tucked his skateboard under his arm and ran up a hill near New York City's Prospect Park.

He started his descent, the wheels of his board whirring as they scraped the smoky city pavement. He maneuvered the board with his body, allowing it to swerve up an embankment. Finally, he straightened his body. As the board slowed, he jumped off.

"See, there's nothing to it. Just keep your balance . . ."

There are lots of people just keeping their balance these days.

From its start in California, skateboarding is rolling slowly east, hitting coastal towns first because most surfboard stores also stock skateboards. In fact, skateboards originally were an offshoot of surfing.

In 1965 when the skateboard mania peaked, about 50 million boards had been sold. A year later it was all over. Now, about 50 manufacturers are producing over half a million boards per week. National skateboard associations are popping up and championship meets are being staged in some of the nation's largest sports arenas.

"It's here to stay now, and it's a legitimate sport," said Jim O'Mahoney, publisher of Skateboard Magazine, and a member of the U.S. Skateboard Association.

"It's a multimillion-dollar business today. It was only about half a million 10 years ago," he said.

Sports and department stores in some of the nation's major cities — and especially in California where the sport is most popular — also say business is booming.

"A year ago, I was selling maybe half a dozen a week," said Larry Mages, secretary-treasurer of Morrie Mages Sports in Chicago. "Now I'm ordering boards every week. Sales have increased more than 100 per cent."

The skateboard renaissance is the result of modern technolgy: the creation of the urethane plastic wheel.

Compared with the clay deposit wheel used on the wooden boards of a decade ago, the urethane and modified polyurethane wheel, when teamed with fiberglass, aluminum and molded plastic boards, provides a more versatile ride.

"There are steel bearings, hydraulic suspensions — it's a highly tuned skateboard," O'Mahoney said. The boards range in price from $10 to $40; come in a variety of colors and run between 24 and 29 inches.

This is more than they were in 1965, but then the skateboard today is faster and more flexible. Speeds go as high as 40 miles per hour, according to enthusiasts.

"It's a whole new sport," says Ron Antonelli, a 30-year-old draftsman who plans to enter the freestyle, slalom and cross-country events at the upcoming pro-skateboard competition in Los Angeles.

"There are a lot more possibilities," he said, "like high speed turning, gripping on banked walls and vertical walls. My fastest speed has been 35 m.p.h."

Antonelli and other skaters who pursued the sport in the late 1960s gave it up when the challenge died out, he said.

The biggest thrill today is "riding pools." The urethane wheel allows the rider to virtually defy gravity by climbing up the side of an empty swimming pool. It's like riding a giant wave because the skater has to be able to shoot about eight feet up a near-vertical wall and then careen down after horizontally hugging the wall for a split second.

Children as young as 5 and 4 are attempting this feat. They also ride the boards on their hands, ride several boards stacked on one another, dance, jump and leap.

Statistics on skateboard accidents are not yet available from the National Safety Council, but Jack Dimon, a former USSA representative, said he's made four trips to the hospital in the last few months for his two oldest sons. "We advocate the use of helmets," he said. "They're just being made, because the market is in an embryonic stage."

Some cities such as San Diego have banned skateboards from sidewalks. The California Highway Patrol is even issuing citations for skateboarders who violate the right-of-way of motorists and pedestrians.

Those skateboarders who participate in the Los Angeles competition race on a ramp that runs 150 feet in the air. They will be required to wear arm and knee pads and helmets.

"Doctors in California have a new term: skateboard fracture," said O'Mahoney of Skateboard Magazine. "But a lot of accidents are caused by parents jumping on boards and saying: 'Oh, that's easy.' It's like jumping on a bar of soap."

A LITTLE SUPPORT . . . for tandem traveller's in Eugene, Ore.

Malaysia Seeking Improved Trade

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Seventeen months after formally establishing diplomatic relations with China, Malaysia still is looking for an improvement in trade and an easing of Peking's support for 2,000 Communist guerrillas seeking to oust the government here.

Malaysian officials say that when the agreement was signed with Peking on May 31, 1974, the Chinese agreed not to interfere in the internal affairs of this Southeast Asian nation.

But, officials here say, the radio of the Malayan Communist party — the Voice of the Malayan Revolution (VOMR) — is broadcasting now from Yunnan in southern China.

The officials add that there has been no significant reduction in propaganda from VOMR and some diplomats keeping track of its broadcasts say it has increased its propaganda rather than decreased it.

Malaysians are forbidden, by decree, to listen to these broadcasts.

On April 30 Radio Peking featured a commentary criticizing the Malaysian government of Prime Minister Tun Abdul Razak and praising the Malaysian Communists as the only group fighting for the people.

"We had no agreement with China for the switching-off of the VOMR. But it is one thing for VOMR to say something and quite another thing for the official government radio of China to say all those nasty things," said a senior Malaysian official.

He added there was little Malaysia could do if the Peking radio continued it's hostile comments.

China has given moral support to the local Communists but has never supplied it with arms, Malaysian officials said.

As for the other issue, there has not been any great reduction in the trade gap between the two countries, and in fact the gap is likely to increase further in China's favor, said some diplomats.

In the January to May period this year, Malaysia sold only $13.3 million worth of goods to China and imported $52 million worth. For the same period last year it was $45 million in exports and $80 million in imports.

During 1974, Malaysia as a whole imported $190 million worth compared to $146 million in 1973. Exports in 974 for Malaysia to China were $84 million while in 1973 it was $78 million.

In previous years, too, the balance has been greatly in China's favor with Malaysia importing mainly foodstuffs while exporting natural rubber.

Malasian officials, however, say they don't think these issues will lead to breakup of relations and Malaysia still hopes China will import more and stop interfering in Malaysia's affairs.

Malaysia follows a nonaligned course and favors neutralization of Southeast Asia. Officials maintain the country could not follow those paths without relations with China.

Nation Accumulates Money For Home Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's savings and loan institutions managed to accumulate additional money for home loans during September despite fears that government borrowing activities would drain the institutions, a government report showed Tuesday.

And Federal Home Loan Bank Board Chairman Garth Marston said sample data to date indicates a substantial recovery for early October.

The bank board said new deposits at federally insured savings and loans exceeded withdrawals by $618 million. That was a drop from net new savings of $1.3 billion in August.

But, together with the projected substantial increase for this month, the figures indicated that home builders and buyers weathered without serious problems what some economists had feared would be a threat to the so-far modest recovery in the industry.

Savings and loan institutions provide the bulk of loans for home buyers, but historically have sustained outflows of money when interest rates on government securities rise to the 8% level or higher, prompting depositors to withdraw their savings to get better yields.

During September, the Treasury sold $5 billion in notes.

Texans To Give 'Punkin' Money

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — Officials are promoting the idea of "punkin' money," coupons redeemable for candy, as one way of reducing the risk while keeping the fun in Halloween trick-or-treating.

Others are urging youngsters not to go outside at all on Halloween.

What parents and civic leaders fear is another poisoning case like the one last year in which a father was convicted of killing his 8-year-old son with trick-or-treat candy laced with cyanide.

Memories of that October horror story linger in the Houston area where officials are encouraging youngsters to go to carnivals, parties or just stay home instead of going door-to-door. "There are just too many nuts out there to risk it any more," said one father.

The Houston suburbs of Bellaire, Missouri City, El Lago and La Porte have officially discouraged trick-or-treating. In Deer Park, where O'Bryan lived, a city carnival for some 2,000 children is planned.

Other officials, who believe the trick-or-treat tradition is too deeply ingrained to stop altogether, are promoting the idea of collecting "punkin' money."

Mrs. Pate Nufer, a Houston mother, suggested the idea.

Several Houston chain stores agreed and are printing sheets of 5-cent and 2-cent coupons which will be handed out to children instead of candy. The coupons can be redeemed at stores for "anything but cigarettes and beer," said Mrs. Nufer.

"I dreamed up 'punkinickels' for 5-cent denominations and 'punkinduals' for 2-cent coupons," she said. "I think it sounds better than telling kids they're trick or treating for paper."

Homes participating in the coupon system will post a picture of "Jolly Jack O'Lantern."

The plan is being promoted by the Houston area Jaycees who hope up to 200,000 elementary children in Harris County will participate.

Mrs. Nufer said she believes the program will "keep the fun in Halloween, but take the fear out."

Ronald C. O'Bryan, the 30-year-old man convicted in the case that triggered the trick-or-treat reforms, will spend this Halloween on Huntsville's death row where 26 other inmates call him "the candy man."

A Houston jury last June found O'Bryan guilty of killing his son to collect more than $30,000 in life insurance. Testimony revealed he distributed five packages of poisoned candy during a trick-or-treat outing. He gave one each to his son and to his daughter.

Young Timothy was the only child to sample the candy and an autopsy showed the youngster ate enough cyanide to kill several people.

O'Bryan lives by himself in a small cell with little to occupy his time, his attorney said. O'Bryan has been visited by his father and brother, but not by his wife who testified against him at the trial.

The case is under appeal and O'Bryan's attorney said his client "is still professing his innocence" and "still has faith in the system of justice."

I visited the Chet Ager Nature Center at Pioneers Park Oct. 12 and was appalled to see dead fish in the ponds and fish trying to swim in such shallow water that their backs were exposed. Can't water be pumped in there or something else be done?

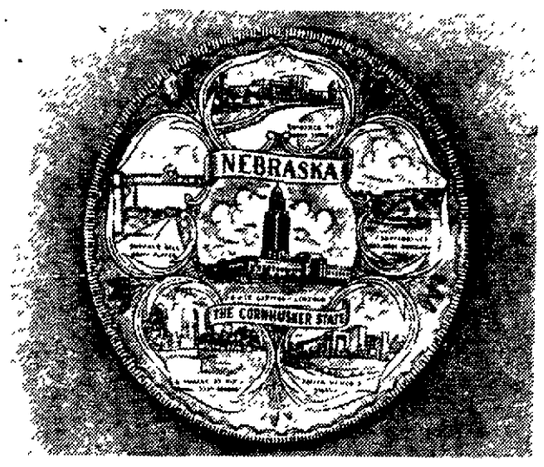

—Diane Schroeder, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: It's not nice to fool Mother Nature, so the margarine television commercial tells us, and that's part of the explanation for what you saw at the Chet Ager Nature Center. Parks and Recreation Dept. Director Dick Hilligus said the center is supoosed to exhibit natural life cycles, which includes the death of fish in a drought period. The fish either will be replaced or will replace themselves in wetter weather, he said. Like a lot of Lincolnites, the fish also are suffering from high water rates. Hilligus said it's just too expensive to pump city water into the ponds.

ACTION UPDATE: A reader in last Wednesday's ACTION LINE asked for help settling a complaint against Martin Roofing Co., formerly of 5736 Judson. The Lincoln Better Business Bureau reported at that time having had several unresolved complaints against Orville Martin, the firm's owner, and said the agency believed he was no longer operating in the Capital City. The BBB now has learned that Martin Roofing is still in business in Lincoln and can supply the firm's address and telephone number to anyone requesting that information.

Where can I get sourvenir or commemorative plates of Lincoln?

—Collector, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: It seems that the plate is pretty clean of any souvenir or commemorative plates solely about Lincoln. At least two Capital City firms, Gulley's of 301 So. 13th St. and The Fun Shop of 1411 O St., sell commemorative plates of Nebraska. The plates show scenes of the Nebraska Capitol and other features of the state. Representatives of both stores said they had never heard of any plates only about Lincoln.

When and where are public health nurses available? What services do they perform besides taking blood pressure?

—A.M., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Public health nurses perform a wide variety of services including immunization, blood pressure tests, disease screening, home nursing and hearing and vision examination,s according to Mrs. Lela Watts, health educator for the Lincoln-Lancaster County Health Dept. These services are available at the department's main office at 2200 St. Mary's Ave., Havelock School at 6224 Logan and the central branch office at 2617 Y St. weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Public health nurses also work at 23 locations around the city once a week. The location closest to you is at the Havelock YWCA, 4332 No. 62nd St. Hours are 1:30-4 p.m. Mondays. Lincolnites in other areas can call the health dept. to find out the location nearest them.

Sixth graders in our area now attend Goodrich Junior High. Other sixth graders across town attend an elementary school. My concern is that kids are not ready to go into junior high at age 10 or 11. I've heard rumors that there's room for them to go to Belmont Elementary School. If anything going to be done about this?

—Mrs. H., Lincoln

ACTION LINE: You'll have a chance soon to make your opinion known to school district officials, according to John Prasch, Lincoln schools superintendent. Prasch said the district is planning to survey residents of your area about whether sixth graders should continue attending Goodrich Junior High. Crowded conditions at Belmont and a desire to see how well a "middle school" attended by sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth graders would work are the reasons why sixth graders attend Goodrich, he said. Prasch noted that the experiment has been successful and that most parents have been pleased with the arrangement.

I've heard that some of the Vietnamese refugees living in Lincoln are on county welfare now. Is this true? I don't think it's right that our tax dollars be spent on this. These people are the responsibility of the sponsors who brought them to town.

—Angry Taxpayer, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Don Williamson, Lancaster County Welfare Dept. deputy director, said there are "some" Vietnamese in Lincoln receiving welfare assistance, but it's part of a federal program and does not involve local tax money. The qualifications are about the same as for county assistance. The program is limited to registered aliens. Of course, you're still paying for the program through federal tax dollars.

I sent a check for $160 for auto insurance to the Criterion Insurance Co. of Washington, D.C., Aug. 18. I never received a receipt so I wrote them again Sept. 30. They have not answered my letter. What can you do?

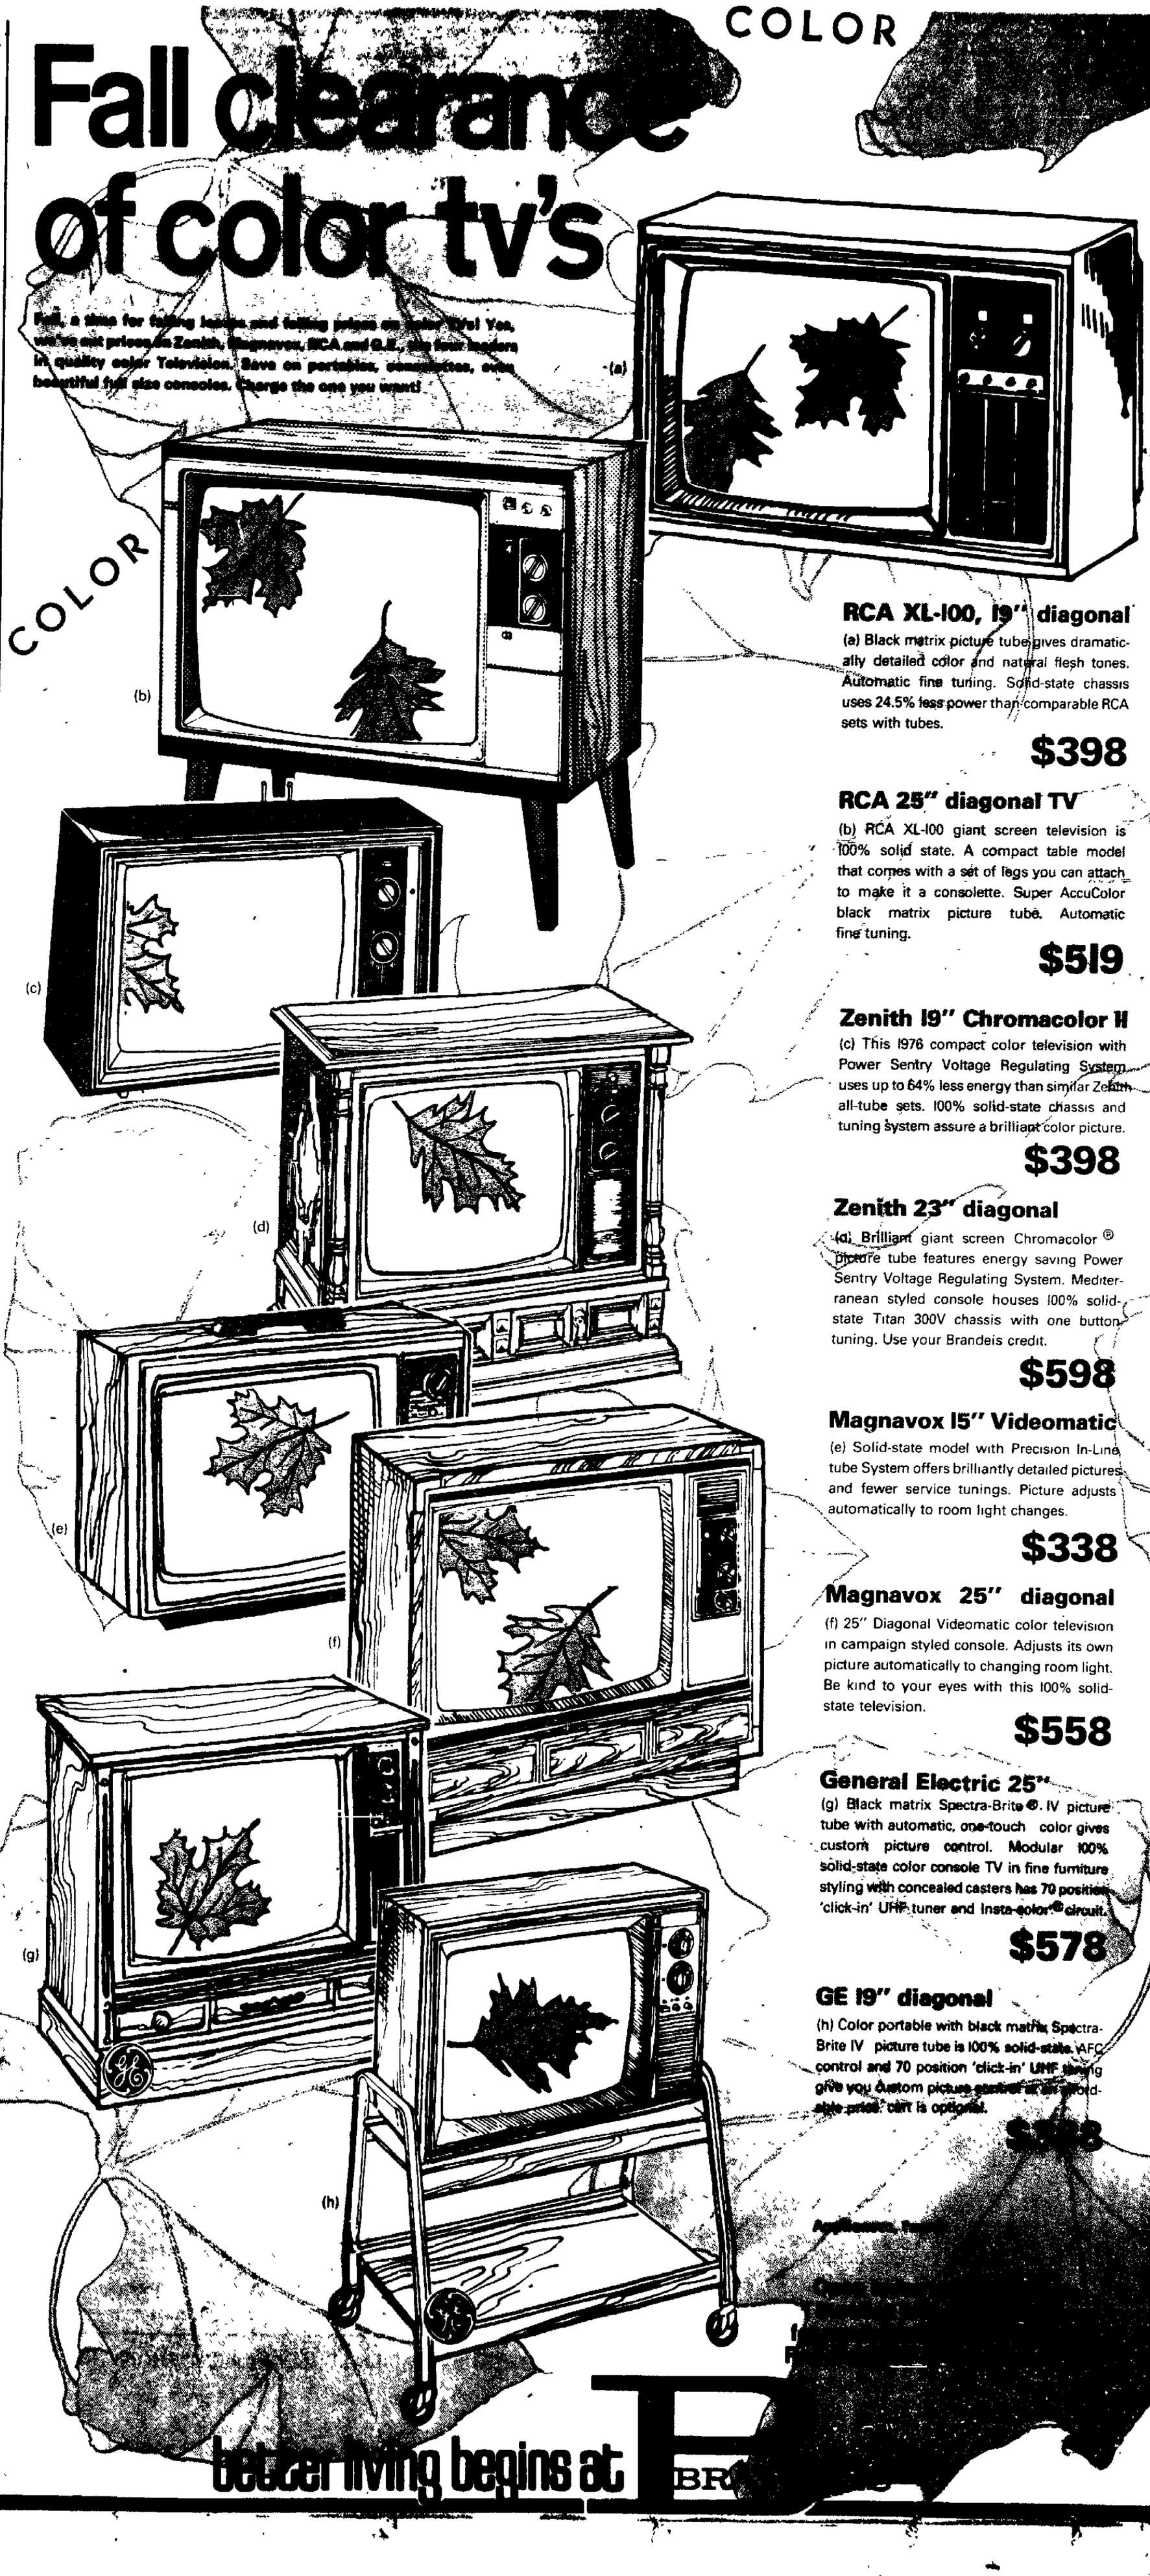

—Ward Hill, Lincoln

ACTION LINE: Mrs. Barbara McCallup, customer service representative for Criterion Insurance Co., 1705 L St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036, said your check was received in late August and paid in full your auto insurance premium until Aug. 1, 1976. She said that you should have been sent some sort of receipt, but that your canceled check also serves as proof of payment.

Ford Claims Companies Sold Counterfeit Parts

By JON SWEET

Omaha (UPI) — The Ford Motor Co. filed a federal lawsuit Tuesday charging four businesses and four individuals with fraud, unfair competition, and deceptive trade practices in the sale of counterfeit parts and accessories for motor vehicles.

U.S. District Judge Robert V. Denney issued a temporary restraining order against the defendants who Ford further alleged violated federal trademark and copyright statutes.

Ford alleged the defendants have advertised, distributed, offered to sell and have sold in interstate and intrastate commerce parts and accessories for motor vehicles in counterfeit packaging bearing the "Ford" and "Motorcraft" trademarks.

Damages 'Substantial'

The matter in controversy, Ford said, exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $10,000. UPI was told, however, that the actual damages, if Ford wins the case, would be "substantial".

Ford asked the defendants to account for and pay over to it an amount equal to all the damages Ford sustained and all profits realized by the defendants. Ford asked the amount of damages it sustained be added to the amount of profits realized by the defendants, and that the total amount be increased to a sum not exceeding three times the total as provided by law.

The defendants have been ordered to appear before U.S. District Judge Albert Schatz on Nov. 7.

The firms named were Auto Supply Company Inc., of Omaha; H. K. Auto Supply Inc., of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Business Forms and Systems, Inc., of Leawood, Kan., and Western Container Co., of Kansas City, Mo.

Individuals named were Harold H. Karp, president and treasurer of Auto Supply Company Inc.; Maureen E. Karp, vice president and secretary of Auto Supply; Esther Sherman, vice president of Auto Supply, and Robert Swassing, secretary-treasurer of H. K. Auto Supply, Inc.

Ford alleged the counterfeit parts and accessories were packaged in containers which "are substantially identical copies, in terms of color and art work" as Ford's containers, and the defendants have "passed off such counterfeit products" as those manufactured by Ford.

Inferior Quality

Ford contended the parts and accessories in question were of "inferior quality" and the defendants "have willfully, knowingly and intentionally engaged in deceptive trade practices and have violated the Nebraska Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act."

Denney's temporary restraining order issued Tuesday prohibits the defendants from "taking any action which would obliterate, destroy or conceal any documents and records of any kind relating directly or indirectly to this action."

The restraining order also prohibits the defendants from manufacturing, packaging, advertising, distributing, offering to sell or sell the products "which do not originate" with Ford.

In addition to the damges, Ford further asks for a preliminary injunction and permanent injunction, which are the next legal steps following a temporary restraining order which could put the defendants out of the business being contested by Ford.

A permanent injunction would require the defendants to recall from their customers or distributors all parts, accessories and other materials relating to the items in question and to deliver them to Ford for destruction.

Ford said it registered the trademark for the name Ford on July 20, 1909, and on June 11, 1929. The Motorcraft trademark was registed on Jan. 3, 1961, and on June 8, 1971. The parts packaging copyrights were registed on Dec. 4, 1967, and on May 24, 1967.

Continued Revenue Sharing Urged

Without revenue sharing the county government will have to cut back on services and cut down on capital expenditures.

And the County Board Tuesday went on record urging the continuation of the federal program in a resolution to the Nebraska delegation in Washington, D.C.

The three-year-old revenue sharing program will end in December 1976, unless Congress votes to continue it.

During this fiscal year, the county put about $2.5 million in revenue sharing funds into the budget. "If you equate that with a mill levy, it would be about four mills, and four additional mills would have put the county above the legal mill levy ceiling, board chairman Jan Gauger said.

The revenue sharing program replaced many federal categorical grants and has been used by the county for current construction of the engineer's district maintenance facility in Waverly, a solid waste disposal program for county villages and enlarging Lancaster Manor.

The board will not be sending a representative to a rally supporting the revenue sharing program, planned for Nov. 18 in Washington, Mrs. Gauger said.

When she visited Washington in February, Mrs. Gauger said she got a firm commitment for the program from the entire Nebraska delegation, except Sen. Carl Curtis.

No Strikes Expected By Nebraska Women

Omaha (AP) — "Alice Doesn't," didn't.

At least that's how the picture of National Women's Strike Day scheduled for Wednesday appeared in Nebraska.

Instead, "Aware but at work," a slogan on buttons distributed by the National Organization for Women's (NOW) Lincoln Chapter, seemed to carry the prevailing theme of the day for Nebraska women.

"we were not expecting anybody in Omaha to go on strike, because we haven't asked for a strike," said Cindy Madden of NOW's Omaha chapter.

Instead, Omaha women were asked to "fill in the blank themselves" in the strike day slogan, chosen from the movie "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore."

"Every woman is Alice. And 'Alice Doesn't' means she can choose for herself what she wants to do on this day," said Ms. Madden.

NOW did have a few suggestions, however, of what "Alice Doesn't" do Wednesday, the ninth anniversary of the women's organization. A leaflet distributed by the Omaha chapter listed on the following:

—She doesn't spend money, thereby demonstrating her economic power.

—She doesn't support male egos socially, economically or politically.

—She doesn't do anything that supresses her freedom and happiness.

For Omaha and Hastings women, job security may have been a factor in the decision not to strike. Those cities employ a large number of women, who are forbidden by their unions from striking.

"I'd be surprised if the ladies here decided to strike. They'd just be penalizing themselves by losing a day's pay," commented Hastings Mayor D.W. Malouf.

Omaha Mayor Edward Zorinsky registered a more forceful reaction a month ago when he learned of plans for a possible strike day.

If any women city employes decided to strike, "I will show them how fast they can be replaced by men," he said.

Events were scheduled throughout the state Wednesday, including "consciousness-raising" demonstrations in Omaha; a breakfast in Lincoln; a forum on rape in Hastings; an awareness seminar at Northeast Nebraska Technical Community College in Norfolk; and a speech at Kearney State College.

GM Earns $243 Million; Chrysler Loses $79 Million

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. said Tuesday its third-quarter earnings increased nearly 14 times from last year's anemic levels to $243 million and its sales were up 20 per cent for the period.

Meanwhile, Chrysler Corp. reported a 3 per cent boost in sales but a record $79-million loss in earnings for the period.

Ford Motor Co. will release its third-quarter financial results Thursday and financial analysts predict the firm will show a drop in profits from the year-ago period.

The firms' earnings were released as industry analysts estmated U.S. car production next month would be down from last year's depressed levels to the lowest output for a nonstrike November since 1960.

Despite recent improvements in car sales, analysts said the auto makers are maintaining a cautious November production schedule. That suggests company internal planners are less optimistic about the strength of the new-car market than their public spokesmen, who have predicted dramatic sales gains for fall and winter.

Analysts say the firms plan to build about 600,000 cars in November, down 2.5 per cent from 615,000 last year. It would be the lowest output for a November in 15 years, with the exception of 1970, when production was depressed by a national GM strike.

By comparison, the companies built 881,000 cars in November 1973 and a record 913,000 cars in November 1965.

GM, demonstrating a sharp turnaround from its depressed financial state 12 months ago, reported record sales of $8.3 billion — a 20 per cent improvement over the July-September 1974 period.

GM's earnings of 84 cents a share compared with profits of $16.7 million, or 5 cents a share, in the year-ago period, and approached the record third-quarter earnings of $267 million set in 1973.

The profits, substantially higher than analysts had expected, were GM's fourth highest for the quarter since World War II.

It was the fifth consecutive period of red ink for Chrysler, which has lost $313 million since the summer of 1974.

Chrysler's loss, equal to $1.31 a share, compares with a loss of $8 million, or 15 cents a share, in the third quarter of 1974, when the firm's string of losses first began.

For the first nine months of this year, Chrysler has lost a record $231.8 million, or $3.87 a share, compared with earnings of $21.4 million, or 38 cents a share, in 1974.

Chairman John J. Riccardo said Chrysler has made reductions in operating costs that should allow it to return to modest profits in the fourth quarter "assuming continued improvement in the economy."

But Riccardo hinted that more cost-cutting steps would be taken.

"In operations where the probability of continued losses remain, extraordinary actions, which could result in nonrecurring losses, may be necessary to protect the company's interests and improve its long-term profitability," he said.

A company spokesman said contemplated actions could involve the firm's troubled British operations, which recently reported a $32 million loss for the first half of 1975.

Chrysler's U.S. car sales in the first nine months of the year were off 25 per cent from last year, compared with an 8 per cent decline at GM and an industrywide drop of 15 per cent.

Chrysler Will Modify Tailpipes Because Of Exhaust Poisonings

Detroit (AP)—Chrysler Corp. said Tuesday it is modifying tailpipes on 6,037 of its 1974-model cars, most of them used by police departments, following four incidents of carbon monoxide poisoning, including two reported deaths.

Chrysler said it has notified owners of the four-door Plymouth Satellites and Dodge Coronets with 360, 400 and 440-cubic-inch engines that a safety problem could develop if the mid-size cars are not properly repaired after an accident.

Chrysler officials said about 80% of the vehicles, specially tuned for high-speed uses, were sold to fleet operators, mainly police.

A company spokesman said the exhaust pipes on the cars would be bent into a downward position. Currently the pipes protrude in a straight position from under the trunk compartments, parallel to the ground.

The spokesman said the tailpipes, as originally designed and built at Chrysler plants are safe. However, unrepaired damage resulting from a collision could lead to a health hazard, he said.

"We are doing this as an extra margin of safety," the spokesman said.

Chrysler's actions came nearly three weeks after the Baltimore police department grounded its Chrysler patrol cars because of two carbon monoxide poisoning incidents, including the death of one policeman.

The firm said it received a report of another fatality in Englewood, N.J.. However, Chrysler said it has not concluded whether the death resulted from carbon monoxide poisoning. A fourth, but nonfatal, incident was reported in Omaha, Neb.

Chrysler officials who inspected the Baltimore police fleet, said the poisonings involved cars which sustained substantial damage in rear-end crashes and had not been properly repaired.

The trunk seals were not replaced and the tailpipes were not bent back into their original positions, allowing exhaust fumes to leak into the passenger compartments, the officials said.

Chrysler said the problem apparently is unique to the fleet vehicles, in part because of a richer fuel mixture into the engine which provides more power but also produces a greater concentration of exhaust fumes.

U.S. Steel's Profits Decline 39%

PITTSBURGH (AP) —U.S. Steel Corp., the nation's largest steelmaker, reported Tuesday a 39% drop in its third quarter profits and a slight decline in its nine-month earnings.

Board Chairman Edgar B. Speer called the results "gratifying under the circumstances," referring to continued sluggish demand for steel because of the recession. All the other steel producers that have reported earnings for the quarter showed declines.

Income for the third quarter was $131.5 million, or $2.43 per share, on revenue of $2.1 billion. This was 39% less than last year when income was $213.6 million, or $3.95 per share, on sales of $2.5 billion.

For the first nine months, U.S. Steel's income was $442.7 million, or $8.17 per share, a 5% decline from profits for the first nine months of a year ago. Excluding $44.6 million on the sale of timberland during the first quarter, income was $398.1 million, or $7.35 per share on sales of $6.3 billion.

For the first nine months of 1974, income was $463.4 million, or $8.56 per share, on revenues of $6.9 billion.

Washington Post Sues Pressmen For $15 Million

Washington (AP) — The Washington Post filed a $15-million damage suit against the striking pressmen's union Tuesday.

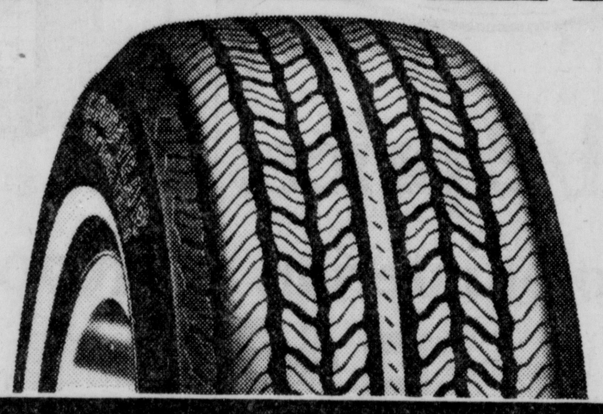

In a civil suit filed in Superior Court, the Post accused the pressmen of "intentionally, willfully, wantonly and maliciously" damaging its presses.

Winnebago Loss Said $2.5 Million

Forest City, Iowa (UPI) — Winnebago Industries Inc. announced Tuesday a loss of almost $2.5 million during the last fiscal year ending Aug. 30.

Board chairman John K. Hanson said the loss comes despite a 25% increase in sales over a year ago. Hanson said one of the main reasons for the loss was high promotional costs to aid in liquidating the 1975 model inventories.

P.S. (PERSONALLY SELECTED) BEEF WITH T.V.T. (TRUE VALUE TRIM)

For years we have brought you P.S. Beef—Personally Selected—because we feel it's the best we can buy for your satisfaction. By adding T.V.T., True Value Trim, we further assure you of getting a good buy. T.V.T. means each cut is trimmed of excess fat and bone before it's weighed so you get more usable meat for your money. Only enough fat (about ½" trim) is left on for full flavor and cooking ease. Excess bones and tips are also removed.

We guarantee each piece marked P.S., T.V.T. is tender and flavorful. For best home storage, there are a few rules to follow. All fresh, cured, cooked and some canned meats should be refrigerated at no more than 36-40°. You can safely store pre-packaged, film wrapped meats in its original wrap if the seal is not broken. However, some still prefer to re-wrap or cover the meat loosely with wax paper. Most meats can be refrigerated for 2-6 days. Stew meat, ground meat, liver, sausage, and poultry should be used within 2 days or should be frozen.

Spooks & Goblin Time Again.

Halloween has long been a favorite of boys and girls everywhere. They look forward to a time when they dress in funny costumes to go house to house carrying paper bags and begging for treats. The Irish really originated the "Trick or Treat" custom.

For several years, many of the older boys and girls have gone from house to house "trick-or-treating" for UNICEF. The money they've collected goes to help children around the world.

It takes special plans by we adults to see that these youngsters have a safe but fun time at "trick or treat." Here are a few things you can do:

1. Be sure one parent or adult goes along.
2. Only allow your children to go to houses in your own neighborhood.
3. See that they accept only wrapped or sealed treats.
4. Have them wait until they return home to sample their treats.
5. Insist on light colored clothing decorated with reflector tape. Be sure the costumes are not long enough to trip over.
6. No masks which restrict vision—Face make-up is more fun, too.
7. Light the Jack-O-Lantern with a flashlight instead of candle if it's to be carried along.
8. Review all "safe pedestrian" rules before leaving home.
9. Drive very carefully—just in case some youngsters forget to observe all the safety rules.

Halloween can be fun for all . . .

Ford Claims Companies Sold Counterfeit Parts

By JON SWEET

Omaha (UPI) — The Ford Motor Co. filed a federal lawsuit Tuesday charging four businesses and four individuals with fraud, unfair competition, and deceptive trade practices in the sale of counterfeit parts and accessories for motor vehicles.

U.S. District Judge Robert V. Denney issued a temporary restraining order against the defendants who Ford further alleged violated federal trademark and copyright statutes.

Ford alleged the defendants have advertised, distributed, offered to sell and have sold in interstate and intrastate commerce parts and accessories for motor vehicles in counterfeit packaging bearing the "Ford" and "Motorcraft" trademarks.

Damages 'Substantial'

The matter in controversy, Ford said, exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum of $10,000. UPI was told, however, that the actual damages, if Ford wins the case, would be "substantial".

Ford asked the defendants to account for and pay over to it an amount equal to all the damages Ford sustained and all profits realized by the defendants. Ford asked the amount of damages it sustained be added to the amount of profits realized by the defendants, and that the total amount be increased to a sum not exceeding three times the total as provided by law.

The defendants have been ordered to appear before U.S. District Judge Albert Schatz on Nov. 7.

The firms named were Auto Supply Company Inc., of Omaha; H. K. Auto Supply Inc., of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Business Forms and Systems, Inc., of Leawood, Kan., and Western Container Co., of Kansas City, Mo.

Individuals named were Harold H. Karp, president and treasurer of Auto Supply Company Inc.; Maureen E. Karp, vice president and secretary of Auto Supply; Esther Sherman, vice president of Auto Supply, and Robert Swassing, secretary-treasurer of H. K. Auto Supply, Inc.

Ford alleged the counterfeit parts and accessories were packaged in containers which "are substantially identical copies, in terms of color and art work" as Ford's containers, and the defendants have "passed off such counterfeit products" as those manufactured by Ford.

Inferior Quality

Ford contended the parts and accessories in question were of "inferior quality" and the defendants "have willfully, knowingly and intentionally engaged in deceptive trade practices and have violated the Nebraska Uniform Deceptive Trade Practices Act."

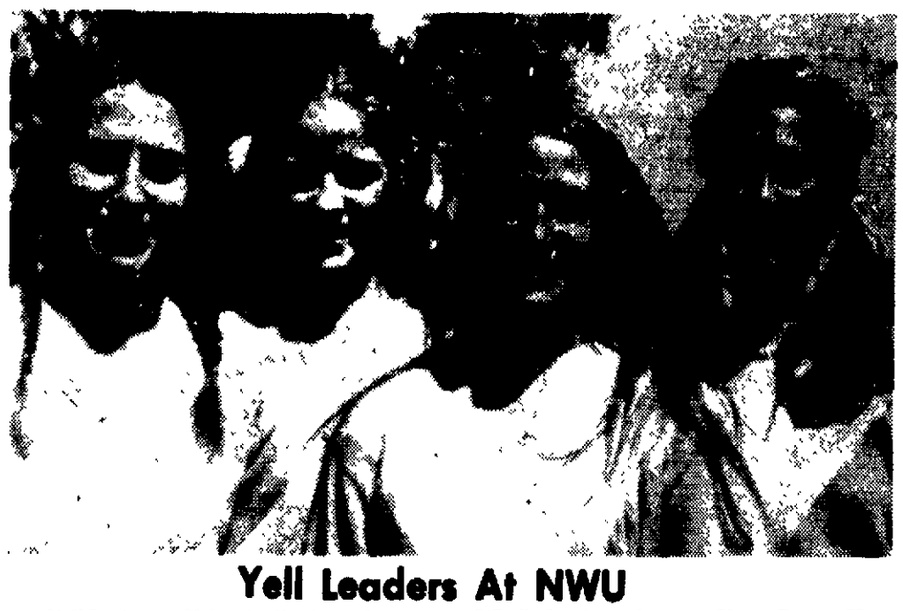

Denney's temporary restraining order issued Tuesday prohibits the defendants from "taking any action which would obliterate, destroy or conceal any documents and records of any kind relating directly or indirectly to this action."

The restraining order also prohibits the defendants from manufacturing, packaging, advertising, distributing, offering to sell or sell the products "which do not originate" with Ford.

In addition to the damges, Ford further asks for a preliminary injunction and permanent injunction, which are the next legal steps following a temporary restraining order which could put the defendants out of the business being contested by Ford.

A permanent injunction would require the defendants to recall from their customers or distributors all parts, accessories and other materials relating to the items in question and to deliver them to Ford for destruction.

Ford said it registered the trademark for the name Ford on July 20, 1909, and on June 11, 1929. The Motorcraft trademark was registed on Jan. 3, 1961, and on June 8, 1971. The parts packaging copyrights were registed on Dec. 4, 1967, and on May 24, 1967.

No Strikes Expected By Nebraska Women

Omaha (AP) — "Alice Doesn't," didn't.

At least that's how the picture of National Women's Strike Day scheduled for Wednesday appeared in Nebraska.

Instead, "Aware but at work," a slogan on buttons distributed by the National Organization for Women's (NOW) Lincoln Chapter, seemed to carry the prevailing theme of the day for Nebraska women.

"we were not expecting anybody in Omaha to go on strike, because we haven't asked for a strike," said Cindy Madden of NOW's Omaha chapter.

Instead, Omaha women were asked to "fill in the blank themselves" in the strike day slogan, chosen from the movie "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore."

"Every woman is Alice. And 'Alice Doesn't' means she can choose for herself what she wants to do on this day," said Ms. Madden.

NOW did have a few suggestions, however, of what "Alice Doesn't" do Wednesday, the ninth anniversary of the women's organization. A leaflet distributed by the Omaha chapter listed on the following:

—She doesn't spend money, thereby demonstrating her economic power.

—She doesn't support male egos socially, economically or politically.

—She doesn't do anything that supresses her freedom and happiness.

For Omaha and Hastings women, job security may have been a factor in the decision not to strike. Those cities employ a large number of women, who are forbidden by their unions from striking.

"I'd be surprised if the ladies here decided to strike. They'd just be penalizing themselves by losing a day's pay," commented Hastings Mayor D.W. Malouf.

Omaha Mayor Edward Zorinsky registered a more forceful reaction a month ago when he learned of plans for a possible strike day.

If any women city employes decided to strike, "I will show them how fast they can be replaced by men," he said.

Events were scheduled throughout the state Wednesday, including "consciousness-raising" demonstrations in Omaha; a breakfast in Lincoln; a forum on rape in Hastings; an awareness seminar at Northeast Nebraska Technical Community College in Norfolk; and a speech at Kearney State College.

Continued Revenue Sharing Urged

Without revenue sharing the county government will have to cut back on services and cut down on capital expenditures.

And the County Board Tuesday went on record urging the continuation of the federal program in a resolution to the Nebraska delegation in Washington, D.C.

The three-year-old revenue sharing program will end in December 1976, unless Congress votes to continue it.

During this fiscal year, the county put about $2.5 million in revenue sharing funds into the budget. "If you equate that with a mill levy, it would be about four mills, and four additional mills would have put the county above the legal mill levy ceiling, board chairman Jan Gauger said.

The revenue sharing program replaced many federal categorical grants and has been used by the county for current construction of the engineer's district maintenance facility in Waverly, a solid waste disposal program for county villages and enlarging Lancaster Manor.

The board will not be sending a representative to a rally supporting the revenue sharing program, planned for Nov. 18 in Washington, Mrs. Gauger said.

When she visited Washington in February, Mrs. Gauger said she got a firm commitment for the program from the entire Nebraska delegation, except Sen. Carl Curtis.

GM Earns $243 Million; Chrysler Loses $79 Million

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. said Tuesday its third-quarter earnings increased nearly 14 times from last year's anemic levels to $243 million and its sales were up 20 per cent for the period.

Meanwhile, Chrysler Corp. reported a 3 per cent boost in sales but a record $79-million loss in earnings for the period.

Ford Motor Co. will release its third-quarter financial results Thursday and financial analysts predict the firm will show a drop in profits from the year-ago period.

The firms' earnings were released as industry analysts estmated U.S. car production next month would be down from last year's depressed levels to the lowest output for a nonstrike November since 1960.

Despite recent improvements in car sales, analysts said the auto makers are maintaining a cautious November production schedule. That suggests company internal planners are less optimistic about the strength of the new-car market than their public spokesmen, who have predicted dramatic sales gains for fall and winter.

Analysts say the firms plan to build about 600,000 cars in November, down 2.5 per cent from 615,000 last year. It would be the lowest output for a November in 15 years, with the exception of 1970, when production was depressed by a national GM strike.

By comparison, the companies built 881,000 cars in November 1973 and a record 913,000 cars in November 1965.

GM, demonstrating a sharp turnaround from its depressed financial state 12 months ago, reported record sales of $8.3 billion — a 20 per cent improvement over the July-September 1974 period.

GM's earnings of 84 cents a share compared with profits of $16.7 million, or 5 cents a share, in the year-ago period, and approached the record third-quarter earnings of $267 million set in 1973.

The profits, substantially higher than analysts had expected, were GM's fourth highest for the quarter since World War II.

It was the fifth consecutive period of red ink for Chrysler, which has lost $313 million since the summer of 1974.

Chrysler's loss, equal to $1.31 a share, compares with a loss of $8 million, or 15 cents a share, in the third quarter of 1974, when the firm's string of losses first began.

For the first nine months of this year, Chrysler has lost a record $231.8 million, or $3.87 a share, compared with earnings of $21.4 million, or 38 cents a share, in 1974.

Chairman John J. Riccardo said Chrysler has made reductions in operating costs that should allow it to return to modest profits in the fourth quarter "assuming continued improvement in the economy."

But Riccardo hinted that more cost-cutting steps would be taken.

"In operations where the probability of continued losses remain, extraordinary actions, which could result in nonrecurring losses, may be necessary to protect the company's interests and improve its long-term profitability," he said.

A company spokesman said contemplated actions could involve the firm's troubled British operations, which recently reported a $32 million loss for the first half of 1975.

Chrysler's U.S. car sales in the first nine months of the year were off 25 per cent from last year, compared with an 8 per cent decline at GM and an industrywide drop of 15 per cent.

Chrysler Will Modify Tailpipes Because Of Exhaust Poisonings

Detroit (AP)—Chrysler Corp. said Tuesday it is modifying tailpipes on 6,037 of its 1974-model cars, most of them used by police departments, following four incidents of carbon monoxide poisoning, including two reported deaths.

Chrysler said it has notified owners of the four-door Plymouth Satellites and Dodge Coronets with 360, 400 and 440-cubic-inch engines that a safety problem could develop if the mid-size cars are not properly repaired after an accident.

Chrysler officials said about 80% of the vehicles, specially tuned for high-speed uses, were sold to fleet operatdrs, mainly police.

A company spokesman said the exhaust pipes on the cars would be bent into a downward position. Currently the pipes protrude in a straight position from under the trunk compartments, parallel to the ground.

The spokesman said the tailpipes, as originally designed and built at Chrysler plants are safe. However, unrepaired damage resulting from a collision could lead to a health hazard, he said.

"We are doing this as an extra margin of safety," the spokesman said.

Chrysler's actions came nearly three weeks after the Baltimore police department grounded its Chrysler patrol cars because of two carbon monoxide poisoning incidents, including the death of one policeman.

The firm said it received a report of another fatality in Englewood, N.J.. However, Chrysler said it has not concluded whether the death resulted from carbon monoxide poisoning. A fourth, but nonfatal, incident was reported in Omaha, Neb.

Chrysler officials who inspected the Baltimore police fleet, said the poisonings involved cars which sustained substantial damage in rear-end crashes and had not been properly repaired.

The trunk seals were not replaced and the tailpipes were not bent back into their original positions, allowing exhaust fumes to leak into the passenger compartments, the officials said.

Chrysler said the problem apparently is unique to the fleet vehicles, in part because of a richer fuel mixture into the engine which provides more power but also produces a greater concentration of exhaust fumes.

U.S. Steel's Profits Decline 39%

PITTSBURGH (AP) —U.S. Steel Corp., the nation's largest steelmaker, reported Tuesday a 39% drop in its third quarter profits and a slight decline in its nine-month earnings.

Board Chairman Edgar B. Speer called the results "gratifying under the circumstances," referring to continued sluggish demand for steel because of the recession. All the other steel producers that have reported earnings for the quarter showed declines.

Income for the third quarter was $131.5 million, or $2.43 per share, on revenue of $2.1 billion. This was 39% less than last year when income was $213.6 million, or $3.96 per share, on sales of $2.5 billion.

For the first nine months, U.S. Steel's income was $442.7 million, or $8.17 per share, a 5% decline from profits for the first nine months of a year ago. Excluding $44.6 million on the sale of timberland during the first quarter, income was $398.1 million, or $7.35 per share on sales of $6.3 billion.

For the first nine months of 1974, income was $463.4 million, or $8.56 per share, on revenues of $6.9 billion.

Washington Post Sues Pressmen For $15 Million

Washington (AP) — The Washington Post filed a $15-million damage suit against the striking pressmen's union Tuesday.

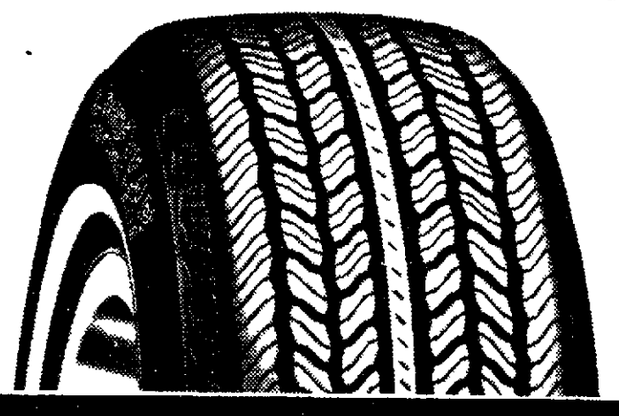

In a civil suit filed in Superior Court, the Post accused the pressmen of "intentionally, willfully, wantonly and maliciously" damaging its presses.

Winnebago Loss Said $2.5 Million

Forest City, Iowa (UPI) — Winnebago Industries Inc. announced Tuesday a loss of almost $2.5 million during the last fiscal year ending Aug. 30.

Board chairman John K. Hanson said the loss comes despite a 25% increase in sales over a year ago. Hanson said one of the main reasons for the loss was high promotional costs to aid in liquidating the 1975 model inventories.

"F32 All Winter" Radial

The Ice Radial is Goodyear's nickname for this revolutionary new winter tire. It gives you a firm grip on winter, without metal studs. Real Estate Group Accused Of $200 Million Swindle

©The New York Times

New York — A real-estate group was indicted Tuesday and charged with a $200 million swindle in the public sale of "undeveloped semi-arid desert lots" in a New Mexico area called Rio Rancho Estates.

The 80-count federal indictment here, alleging one of the most massive land swindles in history, charged that more than 45,000 people from 37 states had been defrauded when they bought Rio Rancho lots for investment.

U.S. Atty. Paul J. Curran said the indictment charged 10 defendants, comprising three companies and seven individuals, with conducting a land swindle that allegedly included many fraudulent practices and "high-pressure sales techniques."

Amrep, Two Subsidiaries

The three corporate defendants are the Amrep Corp. with headquarters here, and two of its subsidiaries, the ATC Realty Corp. and Rio Rancho Estates Inc.

The individual defendants, include two brothers, Howard W. Friedman of Hewlett Harbor, N.Y., the president of Amrep and Rio Rancho, and Daniel Friedman of Manhattan, senior vice president of sales for Amrep.

The other defendants are Irving W. Blum of Manhattan, board chairman of Amrep; Chester Carity of Manhattan, president of ATC Realty; Solomon H. Friend of Great Neck, N.Y., general counsel of Amrep; Henry L. Hoffman of West New York, N.J., an Amrep director, and Herman B. Oberman of Miami Beach, Fla., past president of Amrep.

Pleas Set Nov. 10

Patricia M. Hynes, the federal prosecutor who presented the case to the grand jury, said the defendants were scheduled to plead to the charges in U.S. District Court Nov. 10.

A spokesman for Amrep issued a statement calling the charges against the companies and their officers "wholly unwarranted and legally and morally unjust."

According to the indictment, the defendants bought more than 91,000 acres of desert grazing land outside of Albuquerque, N.M., beginning at 1961.

They bought the land for about $180 an acre, the indictment said, and then sold individual parcels for prices that ranged up to $11,800 an acre for "home site" lots and more than $25,000 an acre for "commercial" lots.

The indictment charged that the defendants had misled the purchasers into believing that the lots were suitable for home and commercial developments, allegedly selling the lots primarily as financial investments that could be resold at substantial profits.

'Unusual Bargain'

The defendants allegedly said they were offering an unusual bargain resulting from their "low markup policy," the indictment continued, although the actual markup was allegedly as much as "several thousand per cent."

The indictment said the defendants had received purchasers into believing that Rio Rancho Estates was directly in the path of Albuquerque's rapid expansion and represented a "virtually risk-free financial investment."

Purchasers were allegedly told of a "master plan" for developing the land, according to the indictment, which said "the defendant and coschemers had no expectation that Rio Rancho Estates could be or would be completely developed in less than 200 years, if ever."

Gen. Slay Promoted Despite Bombing Role

©The New York Times

After delaying a vote for three months, the Senate narrowly confirmed Tuesday the promotion of Air Force Maj. Gen. Alton D. Slay to lieutenant general despite his 1972 involvement in unauthorized bombings of North Vietnam.

The vote was 49 to 43, with Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., voting "present" without explanation.

Opposition to the promotion was led by Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., following its routine approval by the Armed Services Committee July 24.

Slay had testified in 1972 that, as operations officer for Lt. Gen. John D. Lavelle, he had been ordered by Lavelle to stage the unauthorized bombing missions and later to have the official reports falsified.

Those who defended Gen. Slay for obeying orders of a superior officer included Sens. Barry Goldwater of Arizona and Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, both Republicans, and Howard Cannon, D-Nev., all three major generals in the military reserve.

The Air Force has indicated that Gen. Slay will serve as its deputy chief of staff for research and development.

AMA's Campaign May Violate Statutes

©The New York Times

Washington — The staff of the House oversight and investigations subcommittee has concluded that the campaign of the American Medical Association to eliminate chiropractic service in the United States may violate antitrust laws.

Rep. John E. Moss, D-Calif., the chairman of the subcommittee, disclosed the staff conclusions as he forwarded a large number of what were described as AMA documents to the Federal Trade Commission. He asked its "serious attention and consideration."

In a letter to FTC Chairman Lewis A. Engman, Moss said it was the opinion of the subcommittee staff "that these documents may raise the issue of possible antitrust violations by the AMA."

He said that attention should focus on those of the documents "wherein there was either a stated intent by the AMA to eliminate the Chropractic profession or plans were outlined to carry out that intent via harassment, delicensing and inducement of the boycotting of chriopractic services."

Source Anonymous

The documents, whose contents Moss did not make public, were given to the subcommittee by an anonymous source. Over the last few months, the same source has provided newsmen with a seemingly endless stream of photocopied AMA memoranda that raise questions about the purpose of the medical association.

The anonymous critic of the powerful medical group has been nicknamed "Sore Throat" by newsmen, in a parody of "Deep Throat" a name applied to an unidentified source for some of the Washington Post's Watergate information. Tuesday, Sore Throat dispatched a new set of documents that, he said, supported his contention that the AMA was more interested in reducing competition than providing the public with adequate care.

Campaign Outlined

The documents, made available to the New York Times, appear to outline several aspects of the AMA campaign against chiropractic, an internal criticism of the association's activities to restrict the increase of foreign medical graduates in the United States, and a campaign to get hospital interns and residents to join the association.

There approximately 20,000 active American chiropractors. They can now be licensed in all 50 states and the cost of their services can be reimbursed through Medicare and, in most states, Medicaid and workmen's compensation boards. According to a recent article in the New England Journal of Medicine, about five million people, mostly of the lower middle class, visit chiropractors every year.

A spokesman for the AMA, informed of the referral of the documents to the FTC, termed chiropractic "a medical threat to the American people," adding, "In no way have we violated the antitrust law.

Basis Scientific

"Our position on chiropractic," he went on, "is based on scientific investigation and has been stated many times over the years."

A spokesman for the FTC confirmed that the commission had received the letter and documents from Moss, and that the matter was being reviewed by the commission staff. There has been an increasing legal movement in recent years to consider that restrictions of some professional groups may involve price restraints. In June, the FTC proposed a rule that would invalidate the state laws and private agreements that prohibit the advertising by pharmacists of prescription drugs.

An FTC study said the restrictions on the pharmacists violated antitrust laws and caused American consumers to pay $300 more a year than they should have for prescription drugs.

Breast Feeding Good For Teeth

CHICAGO (AP) — Breast feeding babies can help prevent tooth decay, a dental scientist said Tuesday.

"It is in infancy that the groundwork is laid for future dental health problems," he said.

The scientist, Dr. Julius Ozick of New Rochelle, N.Y., a dental faculty member at New York University, spoke at the annual meeting of the American Dental Association.

"Human mother's milk was designed to be consumed by infants and cow milk was designed to be consumed by calves," he said.

Ozick pointed out that formulas given to bottle-fed babies contain added lactose — milk sugar or corn sugar, so the babies very early develop a taste for sweets.

In infancy, humans not only have taste receptors on the tongue but on the lips and in the throat, a fact which is significant in development of later tastes, the dentist noted.

"Babies who are bottle-fed, and they perhaps represent the majority of infants, are being fed a sweet-tasting, high-carbohydrate diet from birth," he said.

"These infants grow into toddlers who may very well desire sweets because of their previous feeding experience," Ozick said.

Canned baby foods also contribute to further development of a sweet tooth, he said, because even foods which are naturally sweet have added sugar.

"By the time a child reaches the age of 3 or 4, a sugar-consuming preference has been strongly ingrained in his eating habits," he said.

"Unless steps to reverse this pattern are taken early and vigorously, it will remain a lifelong pattern tending toward dental disease, obesity and possibly coronary disease later in life," Ozick said.

N-Blast Generates Tremors

MERCURY, Nev. (AP) — A powerful nuclear warhead was exploded deep beneath the Nevada Test Site Tuesday, generating sharp earth tremors in four states and causing minor damage in some areas.

The 4:30 a.m. CST blast registered 6.5 on the Richter scale at the University of California Seismographic Statio in Berkeley, Calif., and was equal to the magnitude of an earthquake capable of causing severe damage in populated areas.

It swayed tall buildings 100 miles to the south in Las Vegas, rocked chandeliers in Fresno, Calif., 200 miles west, and moved objects in Utah, to the east. The shaking lasted about 20 seconds in Las Vegas.

Test site officials said they received eight complaints of minor damage including reports of cracked windows, plaster and cement. One complaint came from Benton, Calif., about 100 miles to the west. The others were from Las Vegas, Mt. Charleston and Goldfield, Nev.

The tremor was also felt in portions of northwestern Arizona.

UC Berkeley officals said its telemetry devices felt the blast throughout California.

Danish Psychiatrist Accused Of 'Sex Fascism'

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — A feminist group called the Red Stockings has filed formal complaints here against a leading psychiatrist who wrote that the female brain is inferior to the male's when it comes to abstract thinking and the "constructive association of ideas."

The women accused him of "sex fascism" and of suppression of the female sex. They want him fired from his high posts, but they expressed doubt this will happen.

The feminists are after Dr. Thorkil Vanggaard, the 65-year-old chief psychiatrist of Copenhagen's National Hospital and a former president of the International Society of Psychoanalysis.

Vanggaard wrote a series of newspaper articles in which he concluded that the women's traditional place is in the home and that this is not the result of cultural patterns or male suppression, but of something "deeply rooted in human nature."

Vanggaard also claimed that modern research has demonstrated differences between male and female brains that "explain male superiority in abstract thinking."

The Red Stockings filed formal complaints with the government's Health Board, the Ministry of Education and the Medical Association's Board on Ethics in Medicine.

They claimed that Dr. Vanggaard had proved himself medically incompetent, scientifically dishonest and generally unfit to treat female patients and that, consequently, he should be fired.

Not even the 14 Red Stockings who signed the complaint say they believe seriously that Vanggaard will be fired. But they add that the complaints must be dealt with by the various bodies — practically all male — and a lot of dust could be stirred up.

On one hand, there is the question whether a psychiatrist with a traditional male viewpoint is suited to solve the mental problems of female patients — especially if the problems are caused by the pressure of traditional sexual patterns.

On the other hand, there is the question whether a psychiatrist is not entitled to freedom of expression and opinion.

In their complaints, the feminists described Dr. Vanggaard's newspaper articles as a "diagnosis" apt to provoke fear in his patients and make any women feel humilated, despised and inferior.

"Clearly, it is not just Vanggaard we are after," said Susanne Giese, one of the Red Stockings.

"He is an extreme case, but we do not for one moment think that he is the only psychiatrist who treats female patients with symptoms of male suppression simply by making them adapt to the traditional sexual patterns which may have caused her problems in the first place," she added.

Dr. Vanggaard, a specialist in the history of phallus cults and symbolism, has declined comment pending the official inquiry.

But some of his colleagues said Vanggaard was in deep water with his claim about the superiority of the male brain.

"The results of brain research cannot be used in support of arguments of that type," said Prof. A. Mosfeldt Hansen, a brain specialist, adding that he spoke up only because he wanted to "get my branch of science out of this soup."

Meanwhile, the Health Board said it was not likely to act unless there is a specific complaint by a patient of Dr. Vanggaard. The Ministry of Education said it would look into the matter because Dr. Vanggaard teaches medical students.

The Medical Association's Board on Ethics, whose powers go no further than reprimanding members, was expected to give particular attention to an assertion by the feminists that Dr. Vanggaard violated the association's code forbidding members to make public statements apt to "cause unnecessary fear of illness or create distrust in the medical profession."

Study: Fat Children Are Smarter

Minneapolis, Minn. (AP) — A study of 3,021 youngsters by the University of Minnesota says fat children on the average are smarter than skinny kids.

The researchers said the intelligence quota differences found in the study, which traced infants born at University of Minnesota Hospitals from 1956 to 1966, were "statistically significant."

The average IQ for extremely obese youngsters was eight to 10 points higher than that of extremely lean children at age 4, and averaged five to seven points higher at age 7.

Dr. Robert O. Fisch, associate professor of pediatrics and chief author of the research report, said the IQ difference wasn't what the researchers were looking for, but said it should be helpful for obese children.

"It shows that being overweight does not effect intellectual ability," Fisch said. He said obese youngsters often have self-images damaged by negative public attitudes about obesity, especially attitudes that young children pick up from television.

The IQ differences were found in the extremely obese, those in the 95th to 100th percentile for weight-height ratio, and the extremely lean, those in the zero to fifth percentile.

Of 3,021 children born at the hospitals, researchers checked 1,345 of them at age 4 and examined 1,779 at age 7.

"We wanted to continue the study after the age of 7 but we couldn't get any research money," Fisch said.

The researchers found generally that children who are obese at birth are likely to be fat at age 4, and are likely to have the same condition three years later.

Dr. Fisch said the researchers used a number of factors and characteristics to compare very obese and very lean children at birth and in later years to try to isolate the causes of the two conditions.

Viet Emperor's Cousin Is Living In Garage Unit

CHULA VISTA, Calif. (AP) — Former Vietnamese Army Lt. Col. Vinh Ho, cousin of the last emperor of Vietnam, is living in a one-room garage with his wife and three children.

The renovated garage is on the grounds of the Agapi Foundation, a local unit of the Tolstoy Foundation, a refugee resettlement agency under contract to the government. It operates an eight-bedroom "halfway house" south of San Diego.

The Ho family met this week with their new sponsors, the co regation of Point Loma Church of the Nazarene. Ho is expected to work as a gardener at Point Loma College. Emperor Bao Dai has been in exile in Paris since 1954.

Guarantees Fragile On Municipal Bonds

By JANE BRYANT QUINN

New York — It's slowly dawning on investors that the guarantees on their municipal bonds are more fragile than anyone thought. A general obligation bond is supposed to be backed by the "full faith and credit" of the issuing government. If necessary, they're supposed to raise taxes to pay the debt off.

But if the state has reached its constitutional taxing limit, where are your guarantees? And what if the legislature doesn't want to raise taxes?

Questions like this would have sounded out in left field before New York City's threatened default. But now it can be seen that municipal obligations are political as well as contractual. Bonds are backed by a city's full faith and credit as far as it goes. After that, it's hand-to-hand combat for cash — and bond payments will come second to basic operating needs no matter what the contracts say.

There's another way you can run into trouble when you rely on the word of a political entity. Say you sue the city for fraud and money due you. If the suit were against a corporation, the company would have to go into court and defend itself according to law. But governments have another recourse. They can change the law — which is what has just happened in New York.

Jane Bryant Quinn

Emergency Act

The emergency financial act, which the New York State Legislature passed last month, does more than take control of the city's finances. It provides a special mechanism for staving off creditors.

If you, your mutual fund, your bank, a company you own stock in, or anyone else sues New York City, the city can invoke something called Title 6A. All outstanding suits will then have to be filed under new procedures. If they aren't they may not be eligible for repayment under the eventual "rehabilitation plan" (i.e., bankruptcy settlement).

Furthermore, the city can now have any lawsuit or judgment suspended for 60 days — a period that can be renewed by a judge over and over again. During that time, the lawsuit will be on ice and the city free to use its revenues for essential city functions.

Legal Precedent

From the city's point of view, Title 6A was needed to prevent wholesale seizure of assets after default. But as the noteholders see it, it eliminates the first call they were supposed to have on city revenues. What the noteholders didn't know is that there's legal precedent for abrogating their claims if the city would otherwise be unable to function.

Conclusion: Any iron-clad guarantee issued by a municipality (and New York has one of the stiffest) should be viewed as no more than a political promise. It has a far better chance of being carried out than other promises. In fact, it will be nearly the last promise to go. But if your city gets into serious trouble, the guarantee will likely be worth no more than the paper its written on. Furthermore, some cities don't even permit people to see them.

The discovery that New York (and doubtlessly other cities) has been lying to investors about its finances should at least result in some stiff public disclosure laws. There's a lot of talk that this will be done. But the politicians have gotten there first, to protect their prerogatives.

The new Securities Reform Act of 1975 sets up a municipal securities rulemaking board to clean fly-by-nights out of the bond-selling business. However, an amendment put in by Sen. John Tower of Texas ensures that the board won't carry consumer-protection any further.

Tower Amendment

The Tower Amendment prohibits both the board and the Securities and Exchange Commission from requiring cities to submit financial data for review and revision in advance of a bond offering. Furthermore, it prohibits the board from ordering bond issuers or dealers to distribute financial information to potential investors.

The amendment still leaves room for the SEC to insist that investors be given at least a modicum of information about the bonds they're buying — but we have yet to see whether they'll do so in the face of sure political opposition.

So the wagons are all in a circle. The cities, the politicians and the bond deales are on the inside. And you, the investors, are still on the outside.

Your municipal portfolio may be in good shape — and with care, should remain so. Most American cities are not shaky. But if anything happens to any of the bonds you own, the laws and precedents have already been written to protect the state first. In my next column, I'll list the public disclosures that cities ought to make as a condition of raising money in the public market.

Richardson Co. Discontinues Alcohol Funds

Falls City (UPI) — Either the state or the federal government will have to pick up the tab if the Richardson County Alcohol Safety Action Program is to continue in existence after Friday.

County officials said the discontinuance of financial assistance came about because the county was up to its legal mill levy limit and could find no other county program from which to take the money.

The program has been in existence for two years. The first year, the federal government paid all costs and during the past year the county has paid 25%.

It would have cost the county about $9,500 had the decision been made to continue financial assistance.

Stock Market Erases Some Of Its Loss

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market recovered some of its short-term loss Tuesday as a resolution seemed nearer in the debate over federal assistance for financially troubled New York City.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 12.98 to 851.46, after declining 16.68 in the previous two trading sessions.

Of the 1,841 issues traded on the New York Stock Exchange, 882 advanced in price and 534 declined.

Volume on the Big Board was 17.06 million shares, compared to 13.10 million on Monday.

The Dow average, up several points shortly after the opening, was pushed higher late in the morning by the White House announcement that President Ford will make a speech Wednesday on the New York City financial situation.

The announcement prompted early speculation that Ford's hard stand against federal aid for New York City had softened, but his press secretary told reporters later that the President's position "not to take any action to prevent default" had not changed.

After the announcement, the Senate Banking Committee agreed to vote Thursday on proposals to guarantee loans for the city, which faces $644 million in payroll and notes coming due Dec. 1.

Analysts see the New York City default drama as being a major influence on investor behavior. "The market seems to respond to every little bit of news out of Washington," Newton Zinder of E.F. Hutton Co. said.

Analyst Raymond DeVoe Jr. of Spencer Trask, in what he calls the "countdown to the next D-Day," believes the Federal Reserve Board's easing of money rates is a long-term upward influence on the stock market, with developments in the New York City situation moving it up or down day-to-day.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained 0.37 to 47.89. Standard and Poor's 500-stock index rose .78 to 90.51.

Soybean, Wheat Futures Higher

Chicago (AP) — Soybean and wheat futures closed with firm gains on the Chicago Board of Trade Tuesday in a late flurry of buying that produced widespread short covering.

Soybeans gained 8 cents a bushel and wheat 6 cents. Oats were up 3½ and corn prices were irregular. Soybean oil and meal were irregular. Iced broilers were steady to about ½ cent a pound higher but trade was slow.

Gold futures closed about steady after trading most of the session with a loss of from 50 to $1 an ounce. Trade appeared to lack incentive and any firm support.

Spooks & Goblin Time Again.

Halloween has long been a favorite of boys and girls everywhere They look forward to a time when they dress in funny costumes to go house to house carrying paper bags and begging for treats The Irish really originated the "Trick or Treat" custom

For several years, many of the older boys and girls have gone from house to house "trick-or-treating" for UNICEF The money they've collected goes to help children around the world

It takes special plans by we adults to see that these youngsters have a safe but fun time at "trick or treat" Here are a few things you can do

1. Be sure one parent or adult goes along.
2. Only allow your children to go to houses in your own neighborhood.
3. See that they accept only wrapped or sealed treats.
4. Have them wait until they return home to sample their treats.
5. Insist on light colored clothing decorated with reflector tape. Be sure the costumes are not long enough to trip over.
6. No masks which restrict vision—Face make-up is more fun, too.
7. Light the Jack O-Lantern with a flashlight instead of candle if it's to be carried along
8. Review all "safe pedestrian" rules before leaving home
9. Drive very carefully—just in case some youngsters forget to observe all the safety rules.

Halloween can be fun for all . . .

Real Estate Group Accused Of $200 Million Swindle

©The New York Times

New York — A real-estate group was indicted Tuesday and charged with a $200 million swindle in the public sale of "undeveloped semi-arid desert lots" in a New Mexico area called Rio Rancho Estates.

The 80-count federal indictment here, alleging one of the most massive land swindles in history, charged that more than 45,000 people from 37 states had been defrauded when they bought Rio Rancho lots for investment.

U.S. Atty. Paul J. Curran said the indictment charged 10 defendants, comprising three companies and seven individuals, with conducting a land swindle that allegedly included many fraudulent practices and "high-pressure sales techniques."

Amrep, Two Subsidiaries

The three corporate defendants are the Amrep Corp. with headquarters here, and two of its subsidiaries, the ATC Realty Corp. and Rio Rancho Estates Inc.

The individual defendants, include two brothers, Howard W. Friedman of Hewlett Harbor, N.Y., the president of Amrep and Rio Rancho, and Daniel Friedman of Manhattan, senior vice president of sales for Amrep.

The other defendants are Irving W. Blum of Manhattan, board chairman of Amrep; Chester Carity of Manhattan, president of ATC Realty; Solomon H. Friend of Great Neck, N.Y., general counsel of Amrep; Henry L. Hoffman of West New York, N.J., an Amrep director, and Herman B. Oberman of Miami Beach, Fla., past president of Amrep.

Pleas Set Nov. 10

Patricia M. Hynes, the federal prosecutor who presented the case to the grand jury, said the defendants were scheduled to plead to the charges in U.S. District Court Nov. 10.

A spokesman for Amrep issued a statement calling the charges against the companies and their officers "wholly unwarranted and legally and morally unjust."

According to the indictment, the defendants bought more than 91,000 acres of desert grazing land outside of Albuquerque, N.M., beginning at 1961.

They bought the land for about $180 an acre, the indictment said, and then sold individual parcels for prices that ranged up to $11,800 an acre for "home site" lots and more than $25,000 an acre for "commercial" lots.

The indictment charged that the defendants had misled the purchasers into believing that the lots were suitable for home and commercial developments, allegedly selling the lots primarily as financial investments that could be resold at substantial profits.

'Unusual Bargain'

The defendants allegedly said they were offering an unusual bargain resulting from their "low markup policy," the indictment continued, although the actual markup was allegedly as much as "several thousand per cent."

The indictment said the defendants had received purchasers into believing that Rio Rancho Estates was directly in the path of Albuquerque's rapid expansion and represented a "virtually risk-free financial investment."

Purchasers were allegedly told of a "master plan" for developing the land, according to the indictment, which said "the defendant and coschemers had no expectation that Rio Rancho Estates could be or would be completely developed in less than 200 years, if ever."

SLAY . . . to be lieutenant general.

Gen. Slay Promoted Despite Bombing Role

The New York Times

After delaying a vote for three months, the Senate narrowly confirmed Tuesday the promotion of Air Force Maj. Gen. Alton D. Slay to lieutenant general despite his 1972 involvement in unauthorized bombings of North Vietnam.

The vote was 49 to 43, with Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., voting "present" without explanation.

Opposition to the promotion was led by Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., following its routine approval by the Armed Services Committee July 24.

Slay had testified in 1972 that, as operations officer for Lt. Gen. John D. Lavelle, he had been ordered by Lavelle to stage the unauthorized bombing missions and later to have the official reports falsified.

Those who defended Gen. Slay for obeying orders of a superior officer included Sens. Barry Goldwater of Arizona and Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, both Republicans, and Howard Cannon, D-Nev., all three major generals in the military reserve.

The Air Force has indicated that Gen. Slay will serve as its deputy chief of staff for research and development.

AMA's Campaign May Violate Statutes

The New York Times

Washington — The staff of the House oversight and investigations subcommittee has concluded that the campaign of the American Medical Association to eliminate chiropractic service in the United States may violate antitrust laws.

Rep. John E. Moss, D-Calif., the chairman of the subcommittee, disclosed the staff conclusions as he forwarded a large number of what were described as AMA documents to the Federal Trade Commission. He asked its "serious attention and consideration."

In a letter to FTC Chairman Lewis A. Engman, Moss said it was the opinion of the subcommittee staff "that these documents may raise the issue of possible antitrust violations by the AMA."

He said that attention should focus on those of the documents "wherein there was either a stated intent by the AMA to eliminate the Chropractic profession or plans were outlined to carry out that intent via harassment, delicensing and inducement of the boycotting of chiropractic services."

Source Anonymous

The documents, whose contents Moss did not make public, were given to the subcommittee by an anonymous source. Over the last few months, the same source has provided newsmen with a seemingly endless stream of photocopied AMA memoranda that raise questions about the purpose of the medical association.

The anonymous critic of the powerful medical group has been nicknamed "Sore Throat" by newsmen, in a parody of "Deep Throat" a name applied to an unidentified source for some of the Washington Post's Watergate information. Tuesday, Sore Throat dispatched a new set of documents that, he said, supported his contention that the AMA was more interested in reducing competition than providing the public with adequate care.

Campaign Outlined

The documents, made available to the New York Times, appear to outline several aspects of the AMA campaign against chiropractic, an internal criticism of the association's activities to restrict the increase of foreign medical graduates in the United States, and a campaign to get hospital interns and residents to join the association.

There approximately 20,000 active American chiropractors. They can now be licensed in all 50 states and the cost of their services can be reimbursed through Medicare and, in most states, Medicaid and workmen's compensation boards. According to a recent article in the New England Journal of Medicine, about five million people, mostly of the lower middle class, visit chiropractors every year.

A spokesman for the AMA, informed of the referral of the documents to the FTC, termed chiropractic "a medical threat to the American people," adding, "In no way have we violated the antitrust law.

Basis Scientific

"Our position on chiropractic," he went on, "is based on scientific investigation and has been stated many times over the years."

A spokesman for the FTC confirmed that the commission had received the letter and documents from Moss, and that the matter was being reviewed by the commission staff. There has been an increasing legal movement in recent years to consider that restrictions of some professional groups may involve price restraints. In June, the FTC proposed a rule that would invalidate the state laws and private agreements that prohibit the advertising by pharmacists of prescription drugs.

An FTC study said the restrictions on the pharmacists violated antitrust laws and caused American consumers to pay $300 more a year than they should have for prescription drugs.

Breast Feeding Good For Teeth

CHICAGO (AP) — Breast feeding babies can help prevent tooth decay, a dental scientist said Tuesday.

"It is in infancy that the groundwork is laid for future dental health problems," he said.

The scientist, Dr. Julius Ozick of New Rochelle, N.Y., a dental faculty member at New York University, spoke at the annual meeting of the American Dental Association.

"Human mother's milk was designed to be consumed by infants and cow milk was designed to be consumed by calves," he said.

Ozick pointed out that formulas given to bottle-fed babies contain added lactose — milk sugar or corn sugar, so the babies very early develop a taste for sweets.

In infancy, humans not only have taste receptors on the tongue but on the lips and in the throat, a fact which is significant in development of later tastes, the dentist noted.

"Babies who are bottle-fed, and they perhaps represent the majority of infants, are being fed a sweet-tasting, high-carbohydrate diet from birth," he said.

"These infants grow into toddlers who may very well desire sweets because of their previous feeding experience," Ozick said.

Canned baby foods also contribute to further development of a sweet tooth, he said, because even foods which are naturally sweet have added sugar.

"By the time a child reaches the age of 3 or 4, a sugar-consuming preference has been strongly ingrained in his eating habits," he said.

"Unless steps to reverse this pattern are taken early and vigorously, it will remain a lifelong pattern tending toward dental disease, obesity and possibly coronary disease later in life," Ozick said.

N-Blast Generates Tremors

MERCURY, Nev (AP) — A powerful nuclear warhead was exploded deep beneath the Nevada Test Site Tuesday, generating sharp earth tremors in four states and causing minor damage in some areas.

The 4:30 a.m. CST blast registered 6.5 on the Richter scale at the University of California Seismographic Statio in Berkeley, Calif., and was equal to the magnitude of an earthquake capable of causing severe damage in populated areas.

It swayed tall buildings 100 miles to the south in Las Vegas, rocked chandeliers in Fresno, Calif., 200 miles west, and moved objects in Utah, to the east. The shaking lasted about 20 seconds in Las Vegas.

Test site officials said they received eight complaints of minor damage including reports of cracked windows, plaster and cement. One complaint came from Benton, Calif., about 100 miles to the west. The others were from Las Vegas, Mt. Charleston and Goldfield, Nev.

The tremor was also felt in portions of northwestern Arizona.

UC Berkeley officals said its telemetry devices felt the blast throughout California.

Connecticut Students 'Meditate'

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Public school prayer, ruled out by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1962, has been succeeded in Connecticut by "silent meditation."

The state-mandated daily minute of silent thought took effect Oct. 1 with little controversy and apparently a lack of enthusiasm among most teachers and pupils.

In a Troup Middle School homeroom recently, discussion among Ronald Comen's 21 eighth graders was halted at 8:29 a.m. by a bell signaling the meditation period.

Some students closed their eyes, some bowed their heads, others just looked at a wall.

Then, as the students marched off to their first class, Charles Gripper, 14, was asked what he meditated about.

"I was thinking about a big exam here this afternoon, trying to memorize something," he replied.

Comen said, as other Connecticut teachers have, that he was uncertain how many of the pupils understood the meaning of "meditation."

Critics of the new period fear teachers, in an attempt to explain it or because of personal preference, will suggest prayer in violation of the Supreme Court's school-prayer ruling.

Supporters of meditation hope the suggestion will come from religious parents. Comen has found a few parents do encourage their children to use the period for prayer, he said.

The Connecticut Civil Liberties Union (CCLU), alarmed when the original bill in the General Assembly last spring called for a period of prayer, threatened a lawsuit if pupils were encouraged by the state to pray.

The reference was changed from "prayer" to "silent meditation" and the one-sentence bill passed.

A state Education Department spokesman said the statute is believed to be the only mandatory meditation law in the nation. New Hampshire enacted a measure this year that allows local school boards to introduce meditation periods, but only one is believed to have done so.

An Illinois law, which took effect in 1969, allows a voluntary period of "silent reflection," which may not be used for religious practices. Each school decides whether to have such a period.

The Connecticut law requires the one-minute meditation period, but does not require students to use it for meditation.

"From our point of view it seems to be working pretty well," said Williams R. Olds, CCLU executive director. He said his group's 5,500 members in Connecticut had been encouraged to report violations, but none had been received so far.

"I think there is a danger it might become a precedent for other states" and might in those states "be easily converted by the teachers to a prayer period," he added.

State Rep. Howard M. Klebanoff, cochairman of the legislature's Education Committee, continues to oppose the measure as "an attempt to circumvent the intent of the Supreme Court."

The man who introduced the original prayer bill, Senate President Pro Tem Joseph J. Fauliso, is unhappy with the current statute because it does not specify prayer.

"It would have given us a chance to test this legally. We were trying at least to have the court decide," he said.

All of the educators questioned about the new meditation period said they had not heard any complaints about it from parents, teachers or pupils.

Troup Principal William R. Beaty Jr. was enthusiastic about the idea. The meditation period in his school is preceded with a thought for the day. He said the meditation should be longer than one minute to encourage more quiet thought.

As he spoke, eighth grader Pearl Thorpe, 13, stopped to tell him her idea for the next day's thought: "A mind is like an umbrella: it doesn't work 'til open."

Elsewhere, Ashford schools precede each meditation period with a reading from news of the same date in 1775.

At Gilbert High School in Winsted, 14-year-old Cindy Bosco said: "All it is is one minute of staring at the walls."

But classmate Frank Sherwood wished it were longer. "I usually try to go into transcendental meditation, but I need about five or 10 minutes. Just as I'm getting into it, the bell rings."

Integration Saving Catholic Schools

BOSTON (AP) — For some suburban parochial schools, troubled by declining enrollments and rising debts, the integration of Boston schools has been a salvation.

For the first time in years, they are filled to capacity and have waiting lists of white students seeking an alternative to Boston busing.

The parochial schools are taking the students despite an order from Humberto Cardinal Medeiros, head of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Boston, prohibiting their use as antibusing havens.

At St. Stanislaus grammar school in Chelsea, for instance, attendance has been steadily declining and reached a low last year of 160. One of the students was from Boston.

This year, the school has 246 pupils, a 54 per cent increase and 76 of the students are from nearby East Boston. One student at the school is black.

"Our enrollment was very low, and we had room for more children," said the principal, Sister Sanctia Chotkowski. "How much longer could a parish afford to run a school and pay the sisters? This was a major consideration."

Now the school, which had been largely Polish, is filled to capacity with Italian children from East Boston.

"We still get three calls a week" from Boston parents seeking to enroll their children, she said. "If we wanted to, we could have reached 500."

Most of the parents enrolled their children early last spring, before a U.S. District Court integration plan was issued that generally excluded East Boston from busing this year.

Schools in three other parishes in Chelsea also have waiting lists, she said.

Last year, St. Ann, an elementary school in Somerville, had 336 students, none of them from Boston. Now it has 381, and 32 are from Boston's Charlestown section.

At Immaculate Conception, an all-white Catholic school in Everett, there are 336 students this year, 21 of them from Charlestown. A year ago, the school had three Charlestown pupils out of a total of 324.

All the schools are within a mile or two from Boston.

Brother Bartholomew Varden, superintendent of the archdiocesan schools, said the church is conducting a survey to determine if schools are taking Boston students in violation of the cardinal's orders.

"It's a very complicated situation," he said. "Some schools could have filled up with Boston students if they were just interested in staying in business, but they didn't."

Overall, he said, attendance dropped by 1,300 in suburban schools. But that figure includes pupil losses from the closing of several schools.

According to archdiocesan guidelines, parochial schools are allowed to take new students only to fill vacancies or improve racial balance. They may also take students if a family moves into the parish or already has other children in the school.

Some Catholic educators have pressed the church to enforce its rule on admissions or change it.

"I feel it's embarrassing to the archdiocese to provide a policy and then violate it," said the Rev. William H. Mullin of St. Ambrose Parish in the city's Dorchester section."

For the schools, he said, "I think part of the motivation is financial. Their enrollment has dwindled, and the new students are a financial boost. This is a way to keep the school going."

In recent years, many parochial schools have closed in the predominantly Catholic city. The total has dropped from 345 in 1965 to 253 now.

In the Boston public school system, enrollment has declined steadily since integration began last year. Officials say that of a projected enrollment of 76,127 students this year, excluding kindergarten pupils, 14,000 have not been located.

Wife Of Nobel Laureate Blasts Soviet Scientists

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — Yelena Sakharov says criticism of her husband by a group of Russian scientists was ordered by Soviet authorities. Her husband, dissident Soviet physicist Andrei Sakharov, recently was named winner of this year's Nobel Peace Prize.

"The Soviet academicians are declaring nothing — neither in favor nor against my husband — with an independent spirit," Mrs. Sakharov said. "They only say what Soviet authorities expect them to say or what the authorities order them or other people to say."

Sakharov was portrayed as a slanderer of the system and enemy of peace in a statement purportedly signed by 72 members of the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Mrs. Sakharov is in Italy for eye surgery.

Danish Psychiatrist Accused Of 'Sex Fascism'

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — A feminist group called the Red Stockings has filed formal complaints here against a leading psychiatrist who wrote that the female brain is inferior to the male's when it comes to abstract thinking and the "constructive association of ideas."

The women accused him of "sex fascism" and of suppression of the female sex. They want him fired from his high posts, but they expressed doubt this will happen.

The feminists are after Dr. Thorkil Vanggaard, the 65-year-old chief psychiatrist of Copenhagen's National Hospital and a former president of the International Society of Psychoanalysis.

Vanggaard wrote a series of newspaper articles in which he concluded that the women's traditional place is in the home and that this is not the result of cultural patterns or male suppression, but of something "deeply rooted in human nature."

Vanggaard also claimed that modern research has demonstrated differences between male and female brains that "explain male superiority in abstract thinking."

The Red Stockings filed formal complaints with the government's Health Board, the Ministry of Education and the Medical Association's Board on Ethics in Medicine.

They claimed that Dr. Vanggaard had proved himself medically incompetent, scientifically dishonest and generally unfit to treat female patients and that, consequently, he should be fired.

Not even the 14 Red Stockings who signed the complaint say they believe seriously that Vanggaard will be fired. But they add that the complaints must be dealt with by the various bodies — practically all male — and a lot of dust could be stirred up.

On one hand, there is the question whether a psychiatrist with a traditional male viewpoint is suited to solve the mental problems of female patients — especially if the problems are caused by the pressure of traditional sexual patterns.

On the other hand, there is the question whether a psychiatrist is not entitled to freedom of expression and opinion.

In their complaints, the feminists described Dr. Vanggaard's newspaper articles as a "diagnosis" apt to provoke fear in his patients and make any women feel humilated, despised and inferior.

"Clearly, it is not just Vanggaard we are after," said Susanne Giese, one of the Red Stockings.

"He is an extreme case, but we do not for one moment think that he is the only psychiatrist who treats female patients with symptoms of male suppression simply by making them adapt to the traditional sexual patterns which may have caused her problems in the first place," she added.

Dr. Vanggaard, a specialist in the history of phallus cults and symbolism, has declined comment pending the offical inquiry.

But some of his colleagues said Vanggaard was in deep water with his claim about the superiority of the male brain.

"The results of brain research cannot be used in support of arguments of that type," said Prof. A. Mosfeldt Hansen, a brain specialist, adding that he spoke up only because he wanted to "get my branch of science out of this soup."

Meanwhile, the Health Board said it was not likely to act unless there is a specific complaint by a patient of Dr. Vanggaard. The Ministry of Education said it would look into the matter because Dr. Vanggaard teaches medical students.

The Medical Association's Board on Ethics, whose powers go no further than reprimanding members, was expected to give particular attention to an assertion by the feminists that Dr. Vanggaard violated the association's code forbidding members to make public statements apt to "cause unnecessary fear of illness or create distrust in the medical profession."

Study: Fat Children Are Smarter

Minneapolis, Minn (AP) — A study of 3,021 youngsters by the University of Minnesota says fat children on the average are smarter than skinny kids.

The researchers said the intelligence quota differences found in the study, which traced infants born at University of Minnesota Hospitals from 1956 to 1966, were "statistically significant."

The average IQ for extremely obese youngsters was eight to 10 points higher than that of extremely lean children at age 4, and averaged five to seven points higher at age 7.

Dr. Robert O. Fisch, associate professor of pediatrics and chief author of the research report, said the IQ difference wasn't what the researchers were looking for, but said it should be helpful for obese children.

"It shows that being overweight does not effect intellectual ability," Fisch said. He said obese youngsters often have self-images damaged by negative public attitudes about obesity, especially attitudes that young children pick up from television.

The IQ differences were found in the extremely obese, those in the 95th to 100th percentile for weight-height ratio, and the extremely lean, those in the zero to fifth percentile.

Of 3,021 children born at the hospitals, researchers checked 1,345 of them at age 4 and examined 1,779 at age 7.

"We wanted to continue the study after the age of 7 but we couldn't get any research money," Fisch said.

The researchers found generally that children who are obese at birth are likely to be fat at age 4, and are likely to have the same condition three years later.

Dr. Fisch said the researchers used a number of factors and characteristics to compare very obese and very lean children at birth and in later years to try to isolate the causes of the two conditions.

Viet Emperor's Cousin Is Living In Garage Unit

CHULA VISTA, Calif. (AP) — Former Vietnamese Army Lt Col Vinh Ho, cousin of the last emperor of Vietnam, is living in a one-room garage with his wife and three children.

The renovated garage is on the grounds of the Dapi Foundation, a local unit of the Tolstoy Foundation, a refugee resettlement agency under contract to the government. It operates an eight-bedroom "halfway house" south of San Diego.

The Ho family met this week with their new sponsors, the congregation of Point Loma Church of the Nazarene. Ho is expected to work as a gardener at Point Loma College. Emperor Bao Dai has been in exile in Paris since 1954.

Beatrice Bypass Held Up

By BOB GUENTHER
Star Staff Writer

Nine Beatrice businessmen, anxious for upgrading U.S. 77, were assured Tuesday by state officials that the state will be ready next April to hold public hearings on a proposed Beatrice bypass.

Charles Nutter, deputy state engineer for the State Roads Department, said the department is ready now to meet informally to discuss possible locations for a U.S. 77 bypass around Beatrice.

However, State Engineer Thomas Doyle and Nutter told the group it will be at least another three or four years before work on a four-lane limited access highway using much of the existing highway can begin.

Federal Delay

Doyle noted the entire U.S. 77 project between Lincoln and Beatrice, including bypasses around both cities, is being held up at this time by the federal Department of Transportation, which is weighing objections to the west bypasss in Lincoln.

The Sierra Club is fighting plans for the west bypass in Lincoln to take a chunk of Wilderness Park. Nutter said the department would prefer not to segment portions of the U.S. 77 project, such as the Beatrice bypass, just to avoid the environmental problem.

Gov. J. James Exon told the group, "You can't imagine what environmentalists are doing to delay things . . . Even the Lord can't waive environmental impact statements."

W.W. Cook, chairman of the Beatrice National Bank, referred to three recent traffic fatalities on U.S. 77 and said, "I may be dead by the time that highway is ever built."

'Dangerous'

He added, "It's a terribly dangerous road."

Recalling past highway plans which gave the U.S. 77 project a high priority, Cook asked if Beatrice residents who have lobbied for early completion of the project were getting "the runaround" from the administration.

Cook noted past studies of a four-lane limited access highway which considered routes to the east and west of the existing highway. Those alternates were scrapped almost a year ago in the face of stiff opposition from farmers in the Cortland-Princeton area. The state decided all improvements to U.S. 77 would be done along the existing alignment.

"We've been hearing-ed to death," Cook said.

Exon conceded U.S. 77 construction would be underway at this time had he issued the highway bonds his critics said he should have.

Opposed To Bonds

Exon has repeatedly opposed the use of bonds to construct highways, except in unusual circumstances.

"I still think that was a wise decision," Exon said.

Cook said the bypass around Beatrice is needed due to the heavy volume of traffic, particularly trucks, which passes through town on the existing U.S. 77.

He also criticized current work along U.S. 77 to black-top the highway's shoulders

L. Blocker Takes Job At Hastings

The Hastings City Council has approved the appointment of Lincoln Public Utilities Director Lee Blocker as assistant manager of the Hastings Board of Public Works.

Blocker's resignation from his LIncoln job is effective Jan. 1, when he takes on the Hastings job.

Apparently Blocker will be named to head the Hastings Public Utilities department in June when the current manager, John Foster, retires.

Blocker's salary is $23,500. He will be earning $24,000 in Hastings.

Blocker said one reason he decided to accept the new job is that in Hastings a board of directors supervises public utilities, rather than elected officials.

Blocker suggested Lincoln approve a similar structure to take much of the political pressure off the department.

Blocker specifically has declined to publically comment on his reason for resigning from the Lincoln directorship.

Public Works Director Bob Obering will take over the administration of the utilities department Jan. 1.

Guarantees Fragile On Municipal Bonds

By JANE BRYANT QUINN

New York — It's slowly dawning on investors that the guarantees on their municipal bonds are more fragile than anyone thought. A general obligation bond is supposed to be backed by the "full faith and credit" of the issuing government. If necessary, they're supposed to raise taxes to pay the debt off.

But if the state has reached its constitutional taxing limit, where are your guarantees? And what if the legislature doesn't want to raise taxes?

Questions like this would have sounded out in left field before New York City's threatened default. But now it can be seen that municipal obligations are political as well as contractual. Bonds are backed by a city's full faith and credit as far as it goes. After that, it's hand-to-hand combat for cash — and bond payments will come second to basic operating needs no matter what the contracts say.

There's another way you can run into trouble when you rely on the word of a political entity. Say you sue the city for fraud and money due you. If the suit were against a corporation, the company would have to go into court and defend itself according to law. But governments have another recourse. They can change the law — which is what has just happened in New York.

Jane Bryant Quinn

Emergency Act

The emergency financial act, which the New York State Legislature passed last month, does more than take control of the city's finances. It provides a special mechanism for staving off creditors.

If you, your mutual fund, your bank, a company you own stock in, or anyone else sues New York City, the city can invoke something called Title 6A. All outstanding suits will then have to be filed under new procedures. If they aren't they may not be eligible for repayment under the eventual "rehabilitation plan" (i.e., bankruptcy settlement).

Furthermore, the city can now have any lawsuit or judgment suspended for 60 days — a period that can be renewed by a judge over and over again. During that time, the lawsuit will be on ice and the city free to use its revenues for essential city functions.

Legal Precedent

From the city's point of view, Title 6A was needed to prevent wholesale seizure of assets after default. But as the noteholders see it, it eliminates the first call they were supposed to have on city revenues. What the noteholders didn't know is that there's legal precedent for abrogating their claims if the city would otherwise be unable to function.

Conclusion: Any iron-clad guarantee issued by a municipality (and New York has one of the stiffest) should be viewed as no more than a political promise. It has a far better chance of being carried out than other promises. In fact, it will be nearly the last promise to go. But if your city gets into serious trouble, the guarantee will likely be worth no more than the paper its written on. Furthermore, some cities don't even permit people to see them.

The discovery that New York (and doubtlessly other cities) has been lying to investors about its finances should at least result in some stiff public disclosure laws. There's a lot of talk that this will be done. But the politicians have gotten there first, to protect their prerogatives.

The new Securities Reform Act of 1975 sets up a municipal securities rulemaking board to clean fly-by-nights out of the bond-selling business. However, an amendment put in by Sen. John Tower of Texas ensures that the board won't carry consumer-protection any further.

Tower Amendment

The Tower Amendment prohibits both the board and the Securities and Exchange Commission from requiring cities to submit financial data for review and revision in advance of a bond offering. Furthermore, it prohibits the board from ordering bond issuers or dealers to distribute financial information to potential investors.

The amendment still leaves room for the SEC to insist that investors be given at least a modicum of information about the bonds they're buying — but we have yet to see whether they'll do so in the face of sure political opposition.

So the wagons are all in a circle. The cities, the politicians and the bond dealers are on the inside. And you, the investors, are still on the outside.

Your municipal portfolio may be in good shape — and with care, should remain so. Most American cities are not shaky. But if anything happens to any of the bonds you own, the laws and precedents have already been written to protect the state first. In my next column, I'll list the public disclosures that cities ought to make as a condition of raising money in the public market.

Richardson Co. Discontinues Alcohol Funds

Falls City (UPI) — Either the state or the federal government will have to pick up the tab if the Richardson County Alcohol Safety Action Program is to continue in existence after Friday.

County officials said the discontinuance of financial assistance came about because the county was up to its legal mill levy limit and could find no other county program from which to take the money.

The program has been in existence for two years. The first year, the federal government paid all costs and during the past year the county has paid 25%.

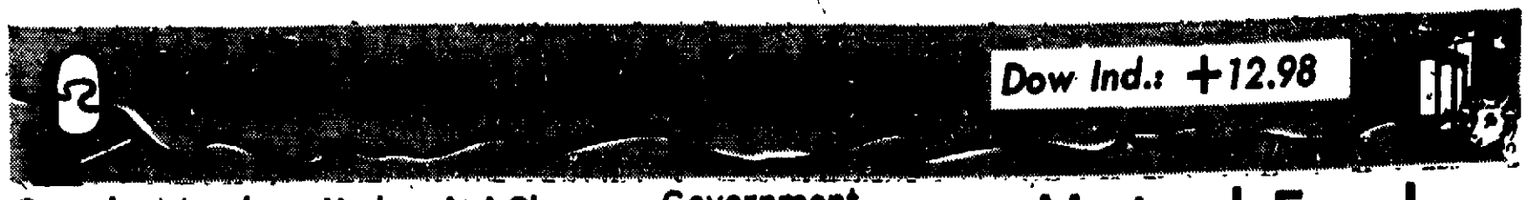

It would have cost the county about $9,500 had the decision been made to continue financial assistance.

Stock Market Erases Some Of Its Loss

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market recovered some of its short-term loss Tuesday as a resolution seemed nearer in the debate over federal assistance for financially troubled New York City.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 12.98 to 851.46, after declining 16.68 in the previous two trading sessions.

Of the 1,841 issues traded on the New York Stock Exchange, 882 advanced in price and 534 declined.

Volume on the Big Board was 17.06 million shares, compared to 13.10 million on Monday.

The Dow average, up several points shortly after the opening, was pushed higher late in the morning by the White House announcement that President Ford will make a speech Wednesday on the New York City financial situation.

The announcement prompted early speculation that Ford's hard stand against federal aid for New York City had softened, but his press secretary told reporters later that the President's position "not to take any action to prevent default" had not changed.

After the announcement, the Senate Banking Committee agreed to vote Thursday on proposals to guarantee loans for the city, which faces $644 million in payroll and notes coming due Dec. 1.

Analysts see the New York City default drama as being a major influence on investor behavior. "The market seems to respond to every little bit of news out of Washington," Newton Zinder of E.F. Hutton Co. said.

Analyst Raymond DeVoe Jr. of Spencer Trask, in what he calls the "countdown to the next D-Day," believes the Federal Reserve Board's easing of money rates is a long-term upward influence on the stock market, with developments in the New York City situation moving it up or down day-to-day.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index gained 0.37 to 47.89. Standard and Poor's 500-stock index rose .78 to 90.51.

Soybean, Wheat Futures Higher

Chicago (AP) — Soybean and wheat futures closed with firm gains on the Chicago Board of Trade Tuesday in a late flurry of buying that produced widespread short covering.

Soybeans gained 8 cents a bushel and wheat 6 cents. Oats were up 3½ and corn prices were irregular. Soybean oil and meal were irregular. Iced broilers were steady to about ½ cent a pound higher but trade was slow.

Gold futures closed about steady after trading most of the session with a loss of from 50 to $1 an ounce. Trade appeared to lack incentive and any firm support.

Home Is 'True Reflection' Of Residents

By TOM COOK
Outstate Nebraska Bureau

Syracuse — The warmth of a home isn't dependent on its style or the price tag of the furniture, only that it be a true reflection of the people that live there.

Nowhere could that be more apparent than in the Syracuse home of K. and Kuni Appelget.

The delicateness and plainness of Far Eastern culture is comfortably mixed with the convenience of Western civilization.

That's one reason a discussion with Appelget on the importance of his oriental geography and history course at Syracuse-Avoca-Dunbar High School doesn't seem out of the ordinary — even when he says it is.

School Unusual

"I seriously doubt that any school in the state puts the emphasis on oriental history like we are," he said.

Appelget's sophomore students are in their ninth week of study on China, which comes in for close scrutiny during the yearlong course.

Even if Americans differ with the political ideas of the communist nation, Appelget said, it is important to try to understand the Chinese.

"When you consider that China has 800 million people and we have about 200 million people, that if war broke out and we could kill two of them for every one of us, when the war was over they would still have more people than we did when we started.

Understanding Necessary

"You better realize we better start trying to understand them," he said.

The graduate of Hastings College with majors in psychology and history said he became interested in the Orient as a youth during World War II.

"I asked myself how could a people who are so unbelievably polite become so vicious," he said.

He joined the Air Force in the mid-fifties and was stationed in the country that had absorbed so much of his intellectual curiosity.

Respect Deep

While in Japan, he derived an even deeper respect for oriental culture and in 1957 met his wife Kuniko.

Appelget has taught in Syracuse for 14 years, and Kuniko, who is a master seamstress, is now manager at the Rich-Mar Mfg. plant.

They moved into their current home seven years ago, and shortly after, they began the project that has snowballed into a unique expression of personal values.

It began with a curiosity as to how a curved Shinto temple gate was constructed. That lead Appelget to try his hand at making a curved oriental bridge, which didn't look right until they added a 3,000-gallon pond complete with god fish and colored carp.

Expanding Garden

The couple is expanding the garden path and adding flowers and shrubs. Wherever possible they do the work by hand, Appelget said, and will probably never complete the project.

The garden is becoming a tourist attraction, Appelget said, with 270 people signing the guest book this summer.

Masumi Danzuka, who is staying with the Appelgets until she can get American citizenship, said gardens like her sponsors' are found mostly in public parks in her native Japan.

"In Japan we like to live by nature, so we like to be close to it. It is not so much for play as an American park, it is a place to sit and reflect," she said.

Americans Can Learn

Oriental patience and a slower life pace are two concepts Americans can learn from orientals, according to Appelget.

He praises the Syracuse school administration that has allowed his department to transfer studies on Latin America, Europe and other traditional high school course into junior high curriculum.

That allows sophomores to take the optional course on the orient. Of the average 90 students a class, about 50 sign up for the course, he said.

Appelget is also proud of the basic geography course offered seniors. Each class picks three subjects for a semester of study from oceanography, anthropology, archaeology, celestial geography, religions of the world and climatology.

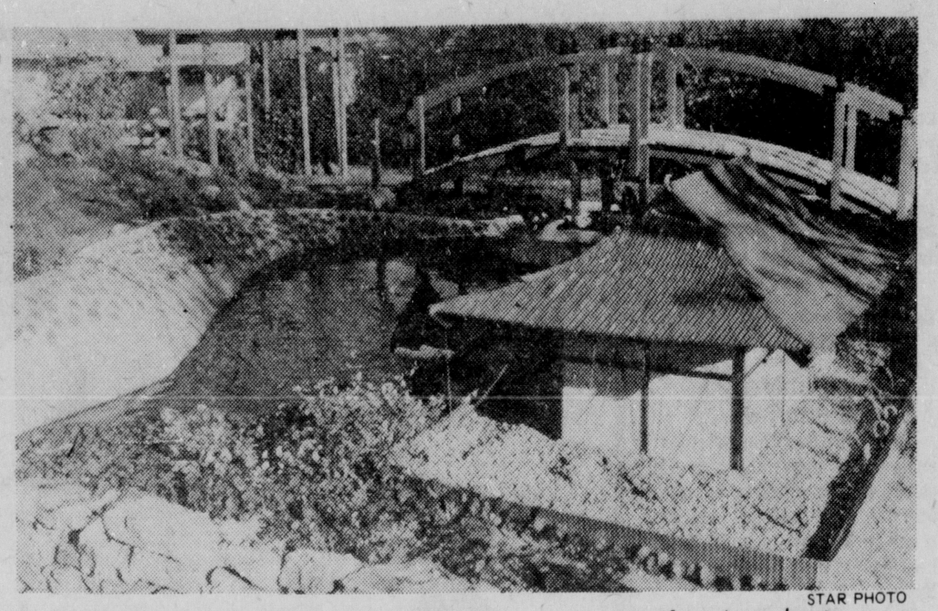

The three most often picked by students are religions of the world, archaeology and celestial geography, he said.

The students are interested in their past, in the potential of space, and choose religions of the world with some prodding from the teacher, Appelget said.

"If you can understand the religion of a people, you've gone a long way towards understanding them. They basically won't go against their religion in their law," he said.

Appelget thinks other school systems would be wise to spend more time on the orient, but said his students are more important than spreading his ideas.

"Our basic philosophy is that every kid has a right to learn as much about his environment as his capacity will allow him to — not neccessarily the obligation, but the right. And that's what we try to give our students," he said.

Flight From City 'On The Reverse'

Omaha (AP) — A Chicago financier and developer predicts that the flight to suburbia is on the reverse, with people moving back to the nation's urban areas.

Former Omahan Philip M. Klutznick says the future of downtown areas is promising and their prosperity is almost inevitable.

"In a free society when things get so bad, you have no choice to correct them," he said in an interview.

Those forces which bled the cities now are at work pumping life into them, he said.

"Distance to the suburbs was once a positive factor. People wanted to get out of the cities. Now, it's a negative factor. It has become a nuisance to get home," he said.

He said cheaper suburban land lured development, but the expense of extending improvements such as water and sewer lines has now made suburban land just as expensive as downtown land, maybe even more expensive.

Additionally, Klutznick said, there is the "energy problem which is putting pressure on people to find a home and living opportunities close to work."

The shift of the nation's economy from a strong industrial base to a strong service-oriented system also is helping the rebirth of downtown areas, he said.

Klutznick is a Creighton Law School graduate and former U.S. delegate to the United Nations. He headed companies which developed Park Forest, Ill., and Chicago area shopping centers.

Barnhart Says Busing Will Affect Blacks Most

Omaha (AP) — No white child will have to ride a bus for more than two years, while black children "are going to be the ones that really are going to suffer" from the court-ordered integration in the Omaha School District, a School Board official said.

Vice President John Barnhart told a service club that forced busing, which has been a major ingredient in court-ordered integration plans, is "the most unpopular thing to Americans since prohibition."

The school district is under a court order to fully integrate its students by the opening of school next September.

Barnhart's conclusions about the length of time children would have to ride a bus to school were based upon the district-wide percentage of white and black children.

At present, he said, about 20% of the district's children are black, and Barnhart said black parents "are not very impressed with the idea — of busing — either.

"I don't suppose any white child will be on a bus more than one year, maybe two," Barnhart said, but he doesn't know how many years black children will have to ride buses.

Omaha Schools Okay Transfers In Some Cases

Omaha (AP) — The Omaha School District, after negotiating with plaintiffs in its segregation lawsuit, has approved 939 special needs transfers while denying 879.

A Board of Education Committee was told that the majority of approved transfers were for reasons of child care.

In its June 12 order, the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that transfers of students from one attendance area to another were to be banned if they increased the segregative nature of either the sending or receiving school.

If strictly interpreted and if there had been no negotiation, a spokesman said this would have resulted in the denial of the 939 transfers which were approved.

Rather To Join Wallace, Safer On '60 Minutes'

New York (AP) — Dan Rather, the former White House correspondent for CBS News, will join the staff of CBS' "60 Minutes" newsmagazine program when it becomes a prime-time series in December, the network said.

Rather, who has anchored the "CBS Reports" news specials for the past year, will be a co-editor as well as a correspondent on "60 Minutes," appearing with Mike Wallace and Morely Safer.

CBS News, which described Rather's new job as a promotion, said Rather, Wallace and Safer will anchor certain segmenets of the show together. At other times, only two of the correspondents will anchor the show when the third is on assignment.

Rather was the network's White House correspondent for almost eight years. He will continue to anchor CBS-TV Saturday evening news program.

Apathy Rampant

Albany, Ga. (UPI) — Radio station WALG took up the subject of public apathy in its daily morning talk show, and invited listeners to call in with their views. 'Only two calls were received during the four hour show, a spokesman said.

Finance Officer: ABP On 'Treadmill'

Omaha (UPI) — The former chief financial officer of American Beef Packers Inc. testified Tuesday it would have been nearly impossible for the one-time meatpacking giant to stop a diversion of funds from its mainline creditor.

Thomas J. Clark, former group vice president-finance, testified Frank R. West, ABP board chairman and president, knew of the funding diversion, and he talked to West on a "number of occasions" about the cash shortage.

It was the discovery of the diversion totaling $3.5 million on Dec. 15 which led General Electric Credit Corp. to shelve a new plan involving an $80 million new line of credit for ABP. American Beef filed limited bankruptcy on Jan. 7.

The U.S. government was expected to conclude its case Wednesday against West, Robert E. Lee, group vice president-cattle procurement, ABP and Beefland International Inc., of Council Bluffs, Iowa, an ABP subsidiary. Defense attorneys said their presentation would run at least three days, and presiding U.S. District Judge Robert V. Denney said he was leaving his docket clear next week for the ABP case if the time was needed.

Clark was the first of more than 60 government witness to appear as a "hostile witness" under federal court guidelines. He testified ABP was on a "treadmill," and "we were always discussing how to clear it (the diversion) up."

"But it was almost impossible for the operation of the company to stop that procedure cold," Clark said.

Clark, who joined ABP in July of last year, said he became aware of the diversion in August or September of 1974 and was told it could have been occuring "a year and a half or two years before my employment."

At one time, Clark said he heard the diversion peaked at $6 million, but he couldn't verify it. He said the diversion was started to speed up collections and because "at times we were short of cash."

When asked by the government if he told West that without the money from the diversion ABP didn't have the cash to operate on, Clark replied, "I'm sure I did."

When asked by the defense, Clark said he didn't go into detail with West about the diversion.

"It was sort of vague," Clark said. "To some extent I told him we were in an overdrawn position and that was the extent of the conversation."

Clark said, however, he believed General Electric Credit shorted ABP about $2.5 million several days prior to the bankruptcy filing. That shortage, Clark said, caused ABP checks to bounce on various banks.

On Dec. 31 of last year, Clark said he was informed by Lowell Smith, ABP money manager, that ABP had been "shorted" about $1.5 million from GECC.

"I was pretty hot about it," Clark said. "GECC did not deny it."

Later Clark said a $1 million difference between GECC's and ABP's figures was uncovered, but "we never did get it resolved."

Clark said ABP was "constantly fighting with GECC" to get GECC wire drafts to cover ABP checks "in on a timely basis."

Clark said he flew by private jet to GECC's Stamford, Conn., headquarters Jan. 6 in a last ditch effort to obtain more funding. He said he thought there were "personality conflicts" between ABP and GECC officials and wanted to see GECC's president.

However, Clark met instead with Bernard Long, the chief supervisor of ABP's account. He said GECC officials sent the American Beef delegation outside Long's office for one or two hours.

Clark said Long came out of the meeting and said "he wouldn't come back to Omaha without his attorney and to go ahead and file a Chapter XI" under the federal bankruptcy statutes.

At the time ABP filed the bankruptcy petition, Clark said its assets exceeded its liabilities by $22 million.

Earlier, William L. Edwards, former ABP treasurer, testified West authorized the payment of a certified check for $381,815.94 to Omaha hog buyers on Jan. 3. The government contends some $800,000 in preferred payment checks were written to West-controlled businesses, his friends and associates while other creditors were left holding debts of more than $25 million.

Testimony has shown Kieth Marquardt, of Bellevue, president of Omaha Hog Buyers, to be a business associate of West's.

"I called Mr. West and discussed with him the payment of this amount, you know," Edwards said, "because we were so tight for cash, the certified check might be considered a preferential payment at the time and he told me to pay this amount."

Edwards said to the best of his knowledge Omaha Hog Buyers had "never" been issued a certified check before.

When asked if he checked with West before he wrote other certified checks prior to the bankruptcy filing, Edwards said "no."

"The discussion that I had on the first check with Marquardt was pretty much broad, 'pay-the-people-who-are-coming-in' type of statement so I did not further check with him," Edwards said.

Edwards said negotiations by ABP for Arab money involving a "substantial amount $70 million or $80 million" failed to materialize.

When asked by the defense of ABP was "charting a course" for bankruptcy, Edwards replied, "No sir, absolutely not."

JFK Sale Problem Limited Market

Omaha (UPI) — The trustee for defunct John F. Kennedy college in Wahoo Tuesday said a limited market and hopes of selling the main campus as a unit pose the biggest problems for a quick sale of the property.

Merle Nicola, federal bankruptcy trustee, said three public auctions failed to produce a buyer for the main campus, and a bid of $125,000 by Wisconsin Synod of the Lutheran Church, which wanted to turn the campus into a high school, was rejected as too low.

He said the appraisal price for the main campus is $394,000, with the entire campus appraised at $660,000. Property off the main campus area will be sold piecemeal, which includes student housing and undeveloped land.

"We're trying to hold the main campus intact, in case someone would want to open a school on it," Nicola said. "We've got one person negotating for three acres and a little white house that was used for student housing."

However, Nicola said he had received no new offers for the main campus area and doubted that a legislative proposal to allow the state to buy the property for use as a veteran's home would be approved by the 1976 Nebraska Legislature.

The campus buildings were being made ready this week for winter and the property will be listed with a real estate agent within 30 days.

"Unless the property can be utilized for something else," Nicola said, "you've got a problem making a sale. The biggest problem is a limited market."

Youngster's Death Hikes Highway Toll

By The Associated Press

Nebraska's mounting highway fatality toll for 1975 went up another notch Tuesday with the death of a Kearney boy.

Seven-year-old Coby Howsden died Tuesday in a Kearney hospital of injuries suffered when he was struck by a car while walking to school Monday.

Officials said the boy was crossing a street when he was struck by a car driven by James L. McKee, 38, of Kearney.

The boy suffered head injuries and both his lets were broken.

His mother, Mrs. Leonard D. Howsden, and his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Bloys, were killed in a traffic accident in July of 1972.

The boy is survived by his father and stepmother, three sisters, a brother and a stepbrother.

The death hiked Nebraska's 1975 traffic fatality toll to 316, compared with 321 at this time last year.

Meanwhile, the Grand Island Police Department Tuesday identified the victim of a Monday accident in that city as Ruth E. Otto, 77, of Phillips. She was killed when her car was in collision with a gasoline tank truck at a Grand Island intersection.

Identification had been withheld pending notification of next of kin.

State's Dry Weather Is Good For Harvest

By The Associated Press

Although dry weather again aided harvest over the state last week, it caused some corn to drop ears and soybean pods to shatter, the Division of Agricultural Statistics reported.

Topsoil and subsoil moisture supplies remained unchanged from last week with most counties short. A year ago topsoil and subsoil were also short in virtually all counties.

Corn harvest continued to make excellend progress with nearly 80% of the crop harvested at this time. This is ahead of last year's 65% and the normal pace of 35% for this point in the year.

Corn moisture content is running mostly in the 12 to 18% range.

Sorghum harvest is now over 95% completed, compared to 75% last year and 55% for normal years. Moisture content is running 10 to 18%.

Soybean harvest is nearing completion statewide, compared with 90% a year ago and the normal at 80%.

Wheat condition over the state has been hampered by the continuously dry weather and has therefore been assessed as poor by 21% of the counties reporting. Sixty-nine per cent is fair and 10% is good. Some counties report spotty stands and below normal growth.

Sugar beet harvest continues, but at a slow pace due to the warm weather and possibility of spoilage.

Pasture and range feed supplies were 91% short in the counties reporting. Cattle continued to be moved to sorghum and stalk fields as they became available.

Moisture received throughout the state during the past week included:

Connecticut Students 'Meditate'

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Public school prayer, ruled out by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1962, has been succeeded in Connecticut by "silent meditation."

The state-mandated daily minute of silent thought took effect Oct. 1 with little controversy and apparently a lack of enthusiasm among most teachers and pupils.

In a Troup Middle School homeroom recently, discussion among Ronald Comen's 21 eighth graders was halted at 8:29 a.m. by a bell signaling the meditation period.

Some students closed their eyes, some bowed their heads, others just looked at a wall.

Then, as the students marched off to their first class, Charles Gripper, 14, was asked what he meditated about.

"I was thinking about a big exam here this afternoon, trying to memorize something," he replied.

Comen said, as other Connecticut teachers have, that he was uncertain how many of the pupils understood the meaning of "meditation."

Critics of the new period fear teachers, in an attempt to explain it or because of personal preference, will suggest prayer in violation of the Supreme Court's school-prayer ruling.

Supporters of meditation hope the suggestion will come from religious parents. Comen has found a few parents do encourage their children to use the period for prayer, he said.

The Connecticut Civil Liberties Union (CCLU), alarmed when the original bill in the General Assembly last spring called for a period of prayer, threatened a lawsuit if pupils were encouraged by the state to pray.

The reference was changed from "prayer" to "silent meditation" and the one-sentence bill passed.

A state Education Department spokesman said the statute is believed to be the only mandatory meditation law in the nation. New Hampshire enacted a measure this year that allows local school boards to introduce meditation periods, but only one is believed to have done so.

An Illinois law, which took effect in 1969, allows a voluntary period of "silent reflection," which may not be used for religious practices. Each school decides whether to have such a period.

The Connecticut law requires the one-minute meditation period, but does not require students to use it for meditation.

"From our point of view it seems to be working pretty well," said Williams R. Olds, CCLU executive director. He said his group's 5,500 members in Connecticut had been encouraged to report violations, but none had been received so far.

"I think there is a danger it might become a precedent for other states" and might in those states "be easily converted by the teachers to a prayer period," he added.

State Rep. Howard M. Klebanoff, cochairman of the legislature's Education Committee, continues to oppose the measure as "an attempt to circumvent the intent of the Supreme Court."

The man who introduced the original prayer bill, Senate President Pro Tem Joseph J. Fauliso, is unhappy with the current statute because it does not specify prayer.

"It would have given us a chance to test this legally. We were trying at least to have the court decide," he said.

All of the educators questioned about the new meditation period said they had not heard any complaints about it from parents, teachers or pupils.

Troup Principal William R. Beaty Jr. was enthusiastic about the idea. The meditation period in his school is preceded with a thought for the day. He said the meditation should be longer than one minute to encourage more quiet thought.

As he spoke, eighth grader Pearl Thorpe, 13, stopped to tell him her idea for the next day's thought: "A mind is like an umbrella: it doesn't work 'til open."

Elsewhere, Ashford schools precede each meditation period with a reading from news of the same date in 1775.

At Gilbert High School in Winsted, 14-year-old Cindy Bosco said: "All it is is one minute of staring at the walls."

But classmate Frank Sherwood wished it were longer. "I usually try to go into transcendental meditation, but I need about five or 10 minutes. Just as I'm getting into it, the bell rings."

Integration Saving Catholic Schools

BOSTON (AP) — For some suburban parochial schools, troubled by declining enrollments and rising debts, the integration of Boston schools has been a salvation.

For the first time in years, they are filled to capacity and have waiting lists of white students seeking an alternative to Boston busing.

The parochial schools are taking the students despite an order from Humberto Cardinal Medeiros, head of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Boston, prohibiting their use as antibusing havens.

At St. Stanislaus grammar school in Chelsea, for instance, attendance has been steadily declining and reached a low last year of 160 One of the students was from Boston.

This year, the school has 246 pupils, a 54 per cent increase and 76 of the students are from nearby East Boston. One student at the school is black.

"Our enrollment was very low, and we had room for more children," said the principal, Sister Sanctia Chotkowski. "How much longer could a parish afford to run a school and pay the sisters? This was a major consideration."

Now the school, which had been largely Polish, is filled to capacity with Italian children from East Boston.

"We still get three calls a week" from Boston parents seeking to enroll their children, she said. "If we wanted to, we could have reached 500."

Most of the parents enrolled their children early last spring, before a U.S. District Court integration plan was issued that generally excluded East Boston from busing this year.

Schools in three other parishes in Chelsea also have waiting lists, she said.

Last year, St. Ann, an elementary school in Somerville, had 336 students, none of them from Boston. Now it has 381, and 32 are from Boston's Charlestown section.

At Immaculate Conception, an all-white Catholic school in Everett, there are 336 students this year, 21 of them from Charlestown. A year ago, the school had three Charlestown pupils out of a total of 324.

All the schools are within a mile or two from Boston.

Brother Bartholomew Varden, superintendent of the archdiocesan schools, said the church is conducting a survey to determine if schools are taking Boston students in violation of the cardinal's orders.

"It's a very complicated situation," he said. "Some schools could have filled up with Boston students if they were just interested in staying in business, but they didn't."

Overall, he said, attendance dropped by 1,300 in suburban schools. But that figure includes pupil losses from the closing of several schools.

According to archdiocesan guidelines, parochial schools are allowed to take new students only to fill vacancies or improve racial balance. They may also take students if a family moves into the parish or already has other children in the school.

Some Catholic educators have pressed the church to enforce its rule on admissions or change it.

"I feel it's embarrassing to the archdiocese to provide a policy and then violate it," said the Rev. William H. Mullin of St. Ambrose Parish in the city's Dorchester section."

For the schools, he said, "I think part of the motivation is financial. Their enrollment has dwindled, and the new students are a financial boost. This is a way to keep the school going."

In recent years, many parochial schools have closed in the predominantly Catholic city. The total has dropped from 345 in 1965 to 253 now.

In the Boston public school system, enrollment has declined steadily since integration began last year. Officials say that of a projected enrollment of 76,127 students this year, excluding kindergarten pupils, 14,000 have not been located.

Wife Of Nobel Laureate Blasts Soviet Scientists

FLORENCE, Italy (AP) — Yelena Sakharov says criticism of her husband by a group of Russian scientists was ordered by Soviet authorities. Her husband, dissident Soviet physicist Andrei Sakharov, recently was named winner of this year's Nobel Peace Prize

"The Soviet academicians are declaring nothing — neither in favor nor against my husband — with an independent spirit," Mrs. Sakharov said. "They only say what Soviet authorities expect them to say or what the authorities order them or other people to say."

Sakharov was portrayed as a slanderer of the system and enemy of peace in a statement purportedly signed by 72 members of the Soviet Academy of Sciences Mrs. Sakharov is in Italy for eye surgery

'Untouchable' Back At His Desk In O'Neill

O'Neill (UPI) — Some 53 years ago a young man left this small farming-ranching community on a hog train to seek his fortune in the legal profession.

William J. Froelich finished law school at Georgetown University in 1926 and he wound up working for the U.S. Justice Dept. in Omaha. His work in liquor and narcotics cases during the prohibition era earned him a wide reputation and an appointment by Mabel Walker Willebrant, assistant attorney general, to a group known initially as the "Secret Six."

That group of attorneys traveled across the nation handling critical cases and later became synonymous with "The Untouchables."

Among Froelich's cases was the prosecution of Al (Scarface) Capone as well as former Florida Gov. Sidney J. Catts.

In the Capone case, he made legal history when the first income tax evasion conviction based on expenditures — Capone dealt on cash only — was handed down.

Catts was indicted for aiding in the manufacture of counterfeit money but a jury found him innocent.

Six years ago, the name of William J. Froelich was back in the news. He was again fighting but a different kind of fight. Those news accounts were about "the last of the Untouchables" and his fight for life. He had suffered a stroke.

He has now returned to the desk he sat behind for 42 years as head of a Chicago law firm formed in 1933 when he resigned from a job with the Treasury Dept. where he helped Walter J. Cummings, an assistant to Secretary Wil H. Woddin, set up the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

But instead of being in Chicago, that desk is now located in the basement of the First National Bank in O'Neill. He is chairman of the board of that bank and has other business interests which he keeps track of from his desk.

Even though he still suffers from a speech impediment as a result of his stroke, Froelich and his wife, Irma now feel the battle begun at the onset of that stroke has been won.

Despite heading a Chicago firm, ties with his home community remained virtually unsevered through the years.

In 1936 he moved his family and children from Chicago to O'Neill and became a 650-mile weekend commuter via the Milwaukee Road, a railroad he first served as a legal assistant and later as a director.

Reminiscing his long career, Froelich said he has only one wish and that one he voiced to a newspaper reporter in 1954.

"If I had my life to live over I would change one thing. I would get closer to God earlier in life."

Unemployment Fund Down By One Third

Nebraska's unemployment fund total of $35.3 million is down more than a third from a year ago, but government officials say the state is in better shape than many others.

The fund is supported by a tax on employers. Out-of-work Nebraskans are currently drawing about $3 million from the fund each month.

In Mid-November, state Labor Department officials and an advisory council will meet to come up with an employer tax rate for 1976.

Eldon Peterson, associate director of the unemployment insurance division, declined to predict the future of the fund and the employer tax rate, but he said "with the current high drawdown, our advisory group is going to have to really wrestle with the charts in setting the 1976 rate."

Ten states have received federal loans to continue unemployment payments because of deficiencies in their funds.

Reprise By Harris

Hollywood (UPI)—Richard Harris will reprise his role as a captive Englishman in "The Return of a Man Called Horse."

Creator Of 'Erma' Asked To Explain

Grand Island (UPI) — The Hall County Board Tuesday decided to give the creator of Erma's Desire, the interstate bicentennial sculpture work the board criticized for failing to represent Nebraska's heritage, a chance to explain his work.

The board, which held a lengthy discussion on the suggestion, voted to allow the artist, John Raimondi, to appear before the board on Nov. 18. Board members said that regardless of their feelings about the abstract art work, Raimondi should be given an opportunity to explain his work.

The work is one of 10 sculptors selected for placement at rest areas along Interstate 80 in Nebraska to commemorate the nation's 200th birthday. Erma's Desire was to be placed at a rest area near Grand Island, but the board has refused to issue a permit for its placement.

In other action, the board went on record as opposing the Platte River Level B study and will send letters to Gov. J. James Exon and the Lower Loup Natural Resources District. The district had asked the board to take a stand on the study.

The supervisors also decided to ask the county attorney for an opinion on whether the county is liable for the erection of school crossing signs. In the past, the county has put up the signs and then charged the school district the costs.

However, a school district between Alda and Wood River is refusing to pay. Supervisor Ben Camp said Sam Grimminger, the county attorney, has agreed verbally that the county is to put up the signs, but the board wants Grimminger's opinion in writing.

NW Power District To Get $2.4 Million

Hay Springs (UPI) — The Northwest Rural Public Power District of Hay Springs has received approval of a $2.48 million loan.

The money, according to the district, will be used to build lines and convert present lines from 7,200 volts to 14,400 or from a single phase line to a three-phase line, or both.

The district hopes to have the new lines installed and conversion of existing lines completed by June 1976.

The district has also installed new equipment in an attempt to increase peak summer load capacity. Two new transformers were delivered to the Mirage Flats and Gordon substations.

The Mirage Flats unit will eventually take over all of the flats area, relieving the Hay Springs and Dunlap substations of at least a third of their load.

Future district plans call for a new substation for the flats area.

The Mirage Flats transformer was purchased for $53,475 while the one at Gordon cost $66,655.

The new unit at Gordon will replace an existing one and will double the substation capacity.

Other future district plans include a new building in Hay Springs as well as rebuilding more lines, moving others and burial of still others.

Rolland Skinner, district manager, said he hopes all planned work will be done by June of next year.

ConAgra Says Preferred Dividends To Be Resumed

Omaha (AP) — ConAgra Inc. reported Tuesday that preferred dividends would be resumed and a 5% dividend would be paid on common stock.

Net earnings in the quarter ended Sept. 21, 1975 were $7,348,970, after a special tax credit of $3 million. Fully diluted earnings were $1.99 a share.

The total compares with a loss of $1,599,493 or a 53-cent loss per share, both primary and diluted, for the first quarter a year ago.

The company told stockholders that sales were $122,768,899 for the first quarter, compared with $135,704,100 in the same quarter a year ago.

"Most of the decrease in dollar sales is due to lower ingredient costs which, in turn, allowed lower prices on ConAgra's finished product," said Claude I. Carter, president and chief executive officer.

"While our first quarter results are obviously very gratifying and demonstrate a continuing momentum in the profitability we established in the second half of last year, there are exceptional circumstances.

"Our earnings cannot be expected to continue at this rate throughout the remainder of the fiscal year," Carter said. "Even so, we do expect this to be a record year."

The exceptional circumstances he mentioned were unusually strong earnings from poultry operations and a portion of ConAgra's operating loss carry forward was utilized to reduce first quarter taxes by $3 million.

ConAgra's board of directors voted to resume payment of all accumulated preferred dividends, which were suspended in September of 1974. Preferred dividend payments will be made to preferred stockholders on Nov. 14.

The directors also declared a 5% stock dividend on the common stock outstanding. The dividend is payable to Dec. 5 to common shareholders of record on Nov. 14.

City Of Omaha To Seek Okay For Wheel Tax

Omaha (AP)—The City of Omaha will seek permission of the State Legislature in January for a wheel tax to all who regularly use Omaha's streets.

Seven other major changes will be requested in the legislative session, as a result of a meeting of Mayor Edward Zorinsky and department heads Monday.

Most have been discussed publicly before, but two that apparently have not been discussed would increase fees the public pays to the Municipal Court, but decrease witness fees.

Among other proposals were:

—Enabling legislation for police and fire auxiliary forces. Zorinsky wants it in case of strikes by police and firemen and to help police with normal duties.

—Authorization for an income tax credit when an owner improves property in a substandard or blighted area.

—An enabling law to set up historical preservation districts.

—Increased sewer hookup charges on new homes.

—Authorization for city government to bill school districts for collection of fees that go to support schools.

Texas Firm's Earnings Down

New York (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc.'s third quarter earnings fell 13% to $16 million from last year's $18.5 million, the company said.

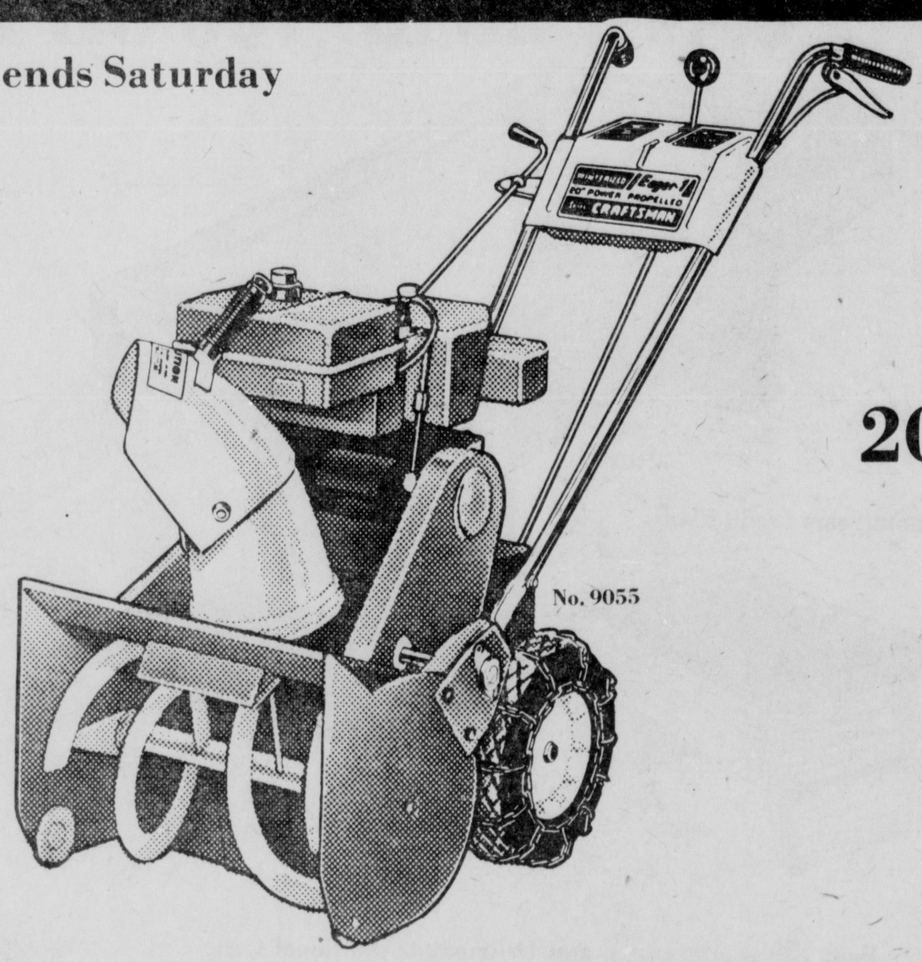

The company, which manufacturers electronic equipment and components, said demand for data terminals, mincomputers, semiconductors, and electrical controls of appliances increased domestically.

Earnings per share were 70 cents, compared to 81 cents in 1974. Sales were off 17%, dropping from $374.9 million to $312.9 million.

Beatrice Bypass Held Up

By BOB GUENTHER
Star Staff Writer

Nine Beatrice businessmen, anxious for upgrading U.S. 77, were assured Tuesday by state officials that the state will be ready next April to hold public hearings on a proposed Beatrice bypass.

Charles Nutter, deputy state engineer for the State Roads Department, said the department is ready now to meet informally to discuss possible locations for a U.S. 77 bypass around Beatrice.

However, State Engineer Thomas Doyle and Nutter told the group it will be at least another three or four years before work on a four-lane limited access highway using much of the existing highway can begin.

Federal Delay

Doyle noted the entire U.S. 77 project between Lincoln and Beatrice, including bypasses around both cities, is being held up at this time by the federal Department of Transportation, which is weighing objections to the west bypasss in Lincoln.

The Sierra Club is fighting plans for the west bypass in Lincoln to take a chunk of Wilderness Park. Nutter said the department would prefer not to segment portions of the U.S. 77 project, such as the Beatrice bypass, just to avoid the environmental problem.

Gov. J. James Exon told the group, "You can't imagine what environmentalists are doing to delay things . . . Even the Lord can't waive environmental impact statements."

W W. Cook, chairman of the Beatrice National Bank, referred to three recent traffic fatalities on U.S. 77 and said, "I may be dead by the time that highway is ever built."

'Dangerous'

He added, "It's a terribly dangerous road."

Recalling past highway plans which gave the U.S. 77 project a high priority, Cook asked if Beatrice residents who have lobbied for early completion of the project were getting "the runaround" from the administration.

Cook noted past studies of a four-lane limited access highway which considered routes to the east and west of the existing highway. Those alternates were scrapped almost a year ago in the face of stiff opposition from farmers in the Cortland-Princeton area. The state decided all improvements to U.S. 77 would be done along the existing alignment.

"We've been hearing-ed to death," Cook said.

Exon conceded U.S. 77 construction would be underway at this time had he issued the highway bonds his critics said he should have.

Opposed To Bonds

Exon has repeatedly opposed the use of bonds to construct highways, except in unusual circumstances.

"I still think that was a wise decision," Exon said.

Cook said the bypass around Beatrice is needed due to the heavy volume of traffic, particularly trucks, which passes through town on the existing U.S. 77.

He also criticized current work along U.S. 77 to black-top the highway's shoulders

L. Blocker Takes Job At Hastings

The Hastings City Council has approved the appointment of Lincoln Public Utilities Director Lee Blocker as assistant manager of the Hastings Board of Public Works.

Blocker's resignation from his LIncoln job is effective Jan. 1, when he takes on the Hastings job.

Apparently Blocker will be named to head the Hastings Public Utilities department in June when the current manager, John Foster, retires.

Blocker's salary is $23,500. He will be earning $24,000 in Hastings.

Blocker said one reason he decided to accept the new job is that in Hastings a board of directors supervises public utilities, rather than elected officials.

Blocker suggested Lincoln approve a similar structure to take much of the political pressure off the department.

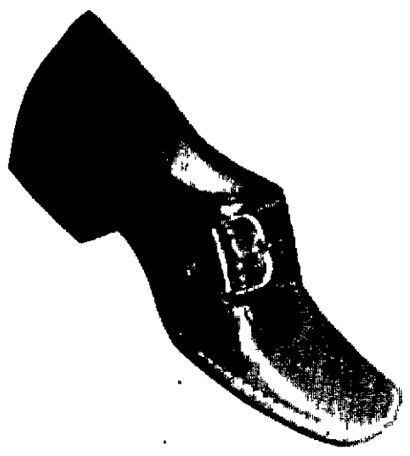

Blocker specifically has declined to publically comment on his reason for resigning from the Lincoln directorship.

Public Works Director Bob Obering will take over the administration of the utilities department Jan. 1.

Testimony Ends In Gretna Road Dispute

Omaha (AP) — U.S. District Judge Albert Schatz has heard final arguments in a two-year dispute between the state and Ron Patterson, a Gretna area farmer-developer.

The trial ended Monday after five days of testimony on whether the State of Nebraska should be allowed to build a road up to the edge of a recreation area, removing hundreds of trees.

The case is believed to be the first of its type heard in Nebraska.

The road involved, 4.1 miles of Neb. 31 from the Interstate 80 turnoff to a point near the old Gretna fish hatchery, is graveled. The proposed project would cost $1.5 million to $2 million.

James M. Gleason, representing Patterson, said the state should be required to file an environmental impact statement with the federal government, since a "whole new road" is proposed, built to major highway specifications.

In final arguments, Gleason said more than 900 "healthy trees would be cut," thereby damaging the environment.

He said the state did not examine an alternate route, such as one suggested by a witness for Patterson, as is required by federal law.

Near the road, Gleason said, are endangered Indian artifacts dating to the 12th Century. The attorney also argued that it is not logical for the state to stop a high-speed road at the edge of the recreational area, where the speed suddenly drops to 20 m.p.h. The 6.1 miles of Neb. 31 running through the recreational area should be included in the project, he said and the environmental effect should be assessed.

Gary Welch, assistant attorney general, and Steve Muehlberg, assistant U.S. attorney representing the secretary of transportation, argued for the state. They said the state and federal agencies involved were given a chance to review the project but did not object to it and that designing a road for the entire 11 miles is unrealistic, since the state has money only for 4.1 miles. A good road is needed to serve the Thousand Oaks housing development and recreational area, Welch and Muehlberg said, and there is "no evidence" of substantial numbers of Indian artifacts in the area.

The two said the existing road is a threat to safety and a bridge on the road should be replaced.

With regard to the loss of trees, they said, nature will readjust to the new situation once the road is built.

Welch and Muehlberg said an alternate route as proposed by Patterson — who owns the Thousand Oaks development — would split farms and relocate families and this would have a severe effect on the environment.

They said the project is "very limited, very small," and therefore does not require an environmental impact statement.

Sierra Club Asks Urbom Rule On Construction Authorization

U.S. District Judge Warren K. Urbom took under advisement Tuesday the Sierra Club's request for a ruling on the legality of construction authorization for the Nebraska Public Power District (NPPD) Gentleman Power Station at Sutherland.

In the latest installment of a two-year struggle over pollution the 650-megawatt plant may cause, attorneys for both sides argued the case through Tuesday morning.

Sierra Club attorney Tony Ruckel questioned NPPD's claims about the sulfur content of its coal and the effect of the air pollution on crops in the Sutherland area.

Speaking for NPPD, Lincoln attorney Robert Crosby said the Sierra Club case amounted to "much ado about nothing."

Crosby said a preponderence of evidence about the plant's ability to meet pollution standards convinced the State Department of Environmental Control (DEC) to allow the plant to be built.

In fact, Crosby said he thought the DEC showed excessive caution by requiring NPPD to have the coal to be burned at the plant tested for sulfur levels before being shipped to Sutherland.

The Sierra Club is seeking installation of a scrubber on the plant to remove sulfur dioxide. NPPD claims a scrubber is too expensive and is unreliable.

Crosby said the federal clean air act's ban on significant deterioration of air quality in clean air regions, such as Sutherland, does not apply to the Gentleman Station since it is sanctioned by a grandfather clause in the act.

2 Counties Given Special Attention

By United Press International

There's no room for beginner errors in two counties where special means will be used to protect the voting rights of those who claim a language other than English as their native tongue, Secretary of State Allen Beermann said Tuesday.

In an interview, Beermann said the amended voting rights act of 1965 imposes no small task on his office and upon officials in Thurston and Scotts Bluff Counties.

"We are going to have to be extremely careful," the state's chief voting officer said. "Otherwise, you always face the possibility of having the federal government stepping in and declaring your election null and void."

Under that voting rights act, the basic concept is to protect fully the right of all Americans to vote up to and including special assistance in another language.

Earlier, Nebraska was informed those two counties fell within the act's jurisdiction and at first Beermann had little information on exactly how the state and local election officials were to meet the terms of the law.

Beermann said he now has some preliminary guidelines from the U.S. Justice Department and they were mailed to the two counties Monday.

He said as near as he can tell, all ballots will have to be printed, in Scotts Bluff County for example, in English and Spanish as will election laws, voter instructions, sample ballots and public notices.

In Thurston County, printing won't be enough, Beermann said, because the situation there centers on an Indian language that is primarily an oral rather than printed one. That apparently means interpreters will be the major requirement there, he said. In Scotts Bluff County, Beermann said only "some" bilingual workers will be needed.

Beermann said he plans to work with such agencies as the Mexican-American Commission, the State Indian Commission and as foreign language departments at learning institutions.

As yet, he said costs have not been pinpointed and he said he hopes to be able to rely as much as possible on volunteer help.

The real problem Beermann said he anticipates is not in the handling of names of candidates for political office. He indicated there are possibly a number of options available on how to handle that without a great deal of trouble.

Instead, the secretary of state said, concern within his office centers on such things as constitutional amendments and proposed law changes the voters must decide.

There are currently two laws that are being proposed for enactment by the voters, one of which is a 26-page campaign reform act. That act, he said, must be printed "line for line" in both languages involved. The other potential issue the voters may face is a proposal to legalize marijuana.

On constitutional proposals, the ballot itself must have only a capsulized version. Ahead of the balloting each proposed amendment must be printed in newspapers across the state in full. Again, Beermann said, that must be done line for line in both languages.

Beermann said his primary responsibility is to see that the voting rights act is met. It is up to the counties, he said, to do the actual work. In his advisory and overseer capacity, Beermann said he would be meeting with the county officials involved in December.

10% Of Parents Wouldn't Have Children Again

New York (UPI) — A survey commissioned for a national magazine indicates that one out of 10 American parents would not have children again if they were starting over.

In a copyrighted article, McCall's magazine said the Gallup Poll showed that about 5.5 million parents of children under 18 wouldn't want children again.

The magazine said a similar survey 10 years ago at Princeton University showed only one out of 100 mothers regretted having children.

Home Is 'True Reflection' Of Residents

By TOM COOK
Outstate Nebraska Bureau

Syracuse — The warmth of a home isn't dependent on its style or the price tag of the furniture, only that it be a true reflection of the people that live there.

Nowhere could that be more apparent than in the Syracuse home of K. and Kuni Appelget.

The delicateness and plainness of Far Eastern culture is comfortably mixed with the convenience of Western civilization.

That's one reason a discussion with Appelget on the importance of his oriental geography and history course at Syracuse-Avoca-Dunbar High School doesn't seem out of the ordinary — even when he says it is.

School Unusual

"I seriously doubt that any school in the state puts the emphasis on oriental history like we are," he said.

Appelget's sophomore students are in their ninth week of study on China, which comes in for close scrutiny during the yearlong course

Even if Americans differ with the political ideas of the communist nation, Appelget said, it is important to try to understand the Chinese.

"When you consider that China has 800 million people and we have about 200 million people, that if war broke out and we could kill two of them for every one of us, when the war was over they would still have more people than we did when we started

Understanding Necessary

"You better realize we better start trying to understand them," he said.

The graduate of Hastings College with majors in psychology and history said he became interested in the Orient as a youth during World War II.

"I asked myself how could a people who are so unbelievably polite become so vicious," he said.

He joined the Air Force in the mid-fifties and was stationed in the country that had absorbed so much of his intellectual curiosity.

Respect Deep

While in Japan, he derived an even deeper respect for oriental culture and in 1957 met his wife Kuniko.

Appelget has taught in Syracuse for 14 years, and Kuniko, who is a master seamstress, is now manager at the Rich-Mar Mfg. plant.

They moved into their current home seven years ago, and shortly after, they began the project that has snowballed into a unique expression of personal values.

It began with a curiosity as to how a curved Shinto temple gate was constructed. That lead Appelget to try his hand at making a curved oriental bridge, which didn't look right until they added a 3,000-gallon pond complete with god fish and colored carp.

Expanding Garden

The couple is expanding the garden path and adding flowers and shrubs. Wherever possible they do the work by hand, Appelget said, and will probably never complete the project.

The garden is becoming a tourist attraction, Appelget said, with 270 people signing the guest book this summer.

Masumi Danzuka, who is staying with the Appelgets until she can get American citizenship, said gardens like her sponsors' are found mostly in public parks in her native Japan.

"In Japan we like to live by nature, so we like to be close to it It is not so much for play as an American park, it is a place to sit and reflect," she said.

Americans Can Learn

Oriental patience and a slower life pace are two concepts Americans can learn from orientals, according to Appelget.

He praises the Syracuse school administration that has allowed his department to transfer studies on Latin America, Europe and other traditional high school course into junior high curriculum.

That allows sophomores to take the optional course on the orient. Of the average 90 students a class, about 50 sign up for the course, he said.

Appelget is also proud of the basic geography course offered seniors. Each class picks three subjects for a semester of study from oceanography, anthropology, archaeology, celestial geography, religions of the world and climatology.

The three most often picked by students are religions of the world, archaeology and celestial geography, he said.

The students are interested in their past, in the potential of space, and choose religions of the world with some prodding from the teacher, Appelget said.

"If you can understand the religion of a people, you've gone a long way towards understanding them. They basically won't go against their religion in their law," he said.

Appelget thinks other school systems would be wise to spend more time on the orient, but said his students are more important than spreading his ideas.

"Our basic philosophy is that every kid has a right to learn as much about his environment as his capacity will allow him to — not neccessarily the obligation, but the right. And that's what we try to give our students," he said.

Flight From City 'On The Reverse'

Omaha (AP) — A Chicago financier and developer predicts that the flight to suburbia is on the reverse, with people moving back to the nation's urban areas.

Former Omahan Philip M. Klutznick says the future of downtown areas is promising and their prosperity is almost inevitable.

"In a free society when things get so bad, you have no choice to correct them," he said in an interview

Those forces which bled the cities now are at work pumping life into them, he said.

"Distance to the suburbs was once a positive factor. People wanted to get out of the cities. Now, it's a negative factor. It has become a nuisance to get home," he said.

He said cheaper suburban land lured development, but the expense of extending improvements such as water and sewer lines has now made suburban land just as expensive as downtown land, maybe even more expensive.

Additionally, Klutznick said, there is the "energy problem which is putting pressure on people to find a home and living opportunities close to work"

The shift of the nation's economy from a strong industrial base to a strong service-oriented system also is helping the rebirth of downtown areas, he said.

Klutznick is a Creighton Law School graduate and former U.S. delegate to the United Nations. He headed companies which developed Park Forest, Ill., and Chicago area shopping centers.

Barnhart Says Busing Will Affect Blacks Most

Omaha (AP) — No white child will have to ride a bus for more than two years, while black children "are going to be the ones that really are going to suffer" from the court-ordered integration in the Omaha School District, a School Board official said.

Vice President John Barnhart told a service club that forced busing, which has been a major ingredient in court-ordered integration plans, is "the most unpopular thing to Americans since prohibition."

The school district is under a court order to fully integrate its students by the opening of school next September.

Barnhart's conclusions about the length of time children would have to ride a bus to school were based upon the district-wide percentage of white and black children.

At present, he said, about 20% of the district's children are black, and Barnhart said black parents "are not very impressed with the idea — of busing — either.

"I don't suppose any white child will be on a bus more than one year, maybe two," Barnhart said, but he doesn't know how many years black children will have to ride buses.

Omaha Schools Okay Transfers In Some Cases

Omaha (AP) — The Omaha School District, after negotiating with plaintiffs in its segregation lawsuit, has approved 939 special needs transfers while denying 879.

A Board of Education Committee was told that the majority of approved transfers were for reasons of child care.

In its June 12 order, the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that transfers of students from one attendance area to another were to be banned if they increased the segregative nature of either the sending or receiving school.

If strictly interpreted and if there had been no negotiation, a spokesman said this would have resulted in the denial of the 939 transfers which were approved.

Rather To Join Wallace, Safer On '60 Minutes'

New York (AP) — Dan Rather, the former White House correspondent for CBS News, will join the staff of CBS' "60 Minutes" newsmagazine program when it becomes a prime-time series in December, the network said.

Rather, who has anchored the "CBS Reports" news specials for the past year, will be a co-editor as well as a correspondent on "60 Minutes," appearing with Mike Wallace and Morely Safer.

CBS News, which described Rather's new job as a promotion, said Rather, Wallace and Safer will anchor certain segmenets of the show together. At other times, only two of the correspondents will anchor the show when the third is on assignment.

Rather was the network's White House correspondent for almost eight years. He will continue to anchor CBS-TV Saturday evening news program.

GOP Members' Opposition Expected

By EDWARD W. HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

Indications are the Republican majority on the Board of Equalization won't go along with Gov. J.J. Exon's proposal to scrap a state financial reserve for fiscal 1975-76.

The three GOP board members, Secretary of State Allen Beermann, Treasurer Frank Marsh and Auditor Ray A.C. Johnson, commented in separate interviews. Exon and his appointed tax commissioner, William Peters, make up the other two votes on the tax-setting board.

Exon's LB4, now pending in the special legislative session, would allow the Equalization Board to ignore a required 5% over-levy when it sets 1976 sales and income tax rates in November.

Exon has said that action, and some budget cutting measures, are needed to avoid dramatic tax increases next year, along with an $11 million deficit.

The bill would also allow the board to ignore express obligations for the same one-year period.

Exon aide William Hoppner said Tuesday the governor "has pointed out that the circumstances are extraordinary, and that he thinks that at this time we should by-pass the 5% reserve, period."

"The entire question is do we avoid higher taxes or don't we," Hoppner said.

All three Republicans said they felt some reserve was mandatory. They were contacted prior to Hoppner's statement.

"I don't think we should get away from the 5% overlevy at all," said Beermann. "It is just good practice whether you're talking about government, corporations or your personal finances."

Beermann, Marsh and Johnson said they would consider proposals other than 5% for a financial cushion, but each said he felt some cushion was a must.

"I haven't decided on what my bottom line figure for a reserve would be, but some reserve should be there," Johnson said.

"I'm not going to slam my foot down on a figure and preempt the legislative hearings or close my mind, but I do think some reserve has got to be there," Marsh said.

Legislative Unit Will Consider Change In Law

A legislative committee will meet Thursday to consider amendments to Nebraska's 1974 Consumer Protection Act, with an eye towards strengthening the measure, state Sen. Gary Anderson of Axtell reported.

Anderson said Tuesday the amendments were requested by the Consumer Affairs Division of the attorney general's office, and would allow the attorney general to directly initiate legal action.

Anderson's Miscellaneous Subjects Committee was directed to conduct the hearings through a resolution passed by the last legislature, calling for revision of the 1974 bill.

Chambers Says He'll Retaliate If Alleged Incident Not Probed

Omaha (AP) — State Sen. Ernest Chambers says he'll "campaign actively" against a U.S. Senate bid by Omaha Mayor Edward Zorinsky if the mayor doesn't investigate allegations that Omaha policemen had sex relations with a prostitute.

Zorinsky reiterated that he won't order lie detector tests for officers unless there is some evidence.

The mayor said, "If Sen. Chambers has tangible evidence, he should come forth with it now."

Chambers has sent Zorinsky the names of 12 officers he claims had sex relations with Lois Bral. The senator said his investigation leads him to believe Mrs. Bral was correct when she said a few weeks ago she had sex relations with about 60 officers.

Chambers also said he believes speculation that Zorinsky will run for the Senate is correct. If so, Zorinsky's failure to investigate the Bral incident will be "an albatross of coverup" as the mayor starts his campaign, Chambers said.

Zorinsky said it would be an abrogation of Chambers' "sworn responsibility" as an elected official if he has evidence and doesn't come forth with it.

The mayor also said Chambers' threats are "tantamount to blackmail."

Public Safety Director Richard Roth said the officers named could sue Chambers.

"I'm not encouraging a lawsuit. But I think they ought to at least consider it," Roth said.

An internal police investigation was made earlier and Police Chief Richard Andersen said five officers apparently were involved. No discipline was given other than oral reprimands.

Keep up with real depth reporting on government, state and community affairs in the Capital Section of the "Sunday Journal and Star."

Budget Bill Threat To Douglas County

Omaha (AP) — One of the budget bills introduced in the special legislative session will break Douglas County government this year if it is passed, County Budget Director Adrian Jaworski told the County Board Tuesday.

The bill, LB3, would put a third-class priority on $2.16 million which the county would receive for general aid, homestead exemptions and other purposes, he said.

"You cannot take $2.16 million out of this year's budget without breaking us," Jaworski said.

The bill would allow the state to indefinitely postpone payments for homestead exemptions and other purposes until state aid is paid in two higher categories, he said.

Jaworski didn't say what agencies would receive higher priority than the county.

The budget director said county officials were informed of LB3 implications Tuesday. He said they were not aware of the impact when the bill was introduced last week.

County commissioners said they will instruct James Moylan, the county's lobbyist, to fight the bill. Commissioner P.J. Morgan, chairman of the board's legislative committee, said he will appear with Jaworski at public hearings this week on the bill to testify against portions regarded as harmful to the county.

The bill is one of several proposed to help tide the state over what Gov. J. James Exon says is a fiscal crisis.

State GOP Chairman Says Exon Incapable

Republican State Chairman Anne Batchelder of Omaha Tuesday said it is "now obvious" that Gov. J. James Exon and his administration are "incapable of managing the state's fiscal operation."

And there is "serious question" as to whether State Tax Commissioner William Peters, an Exon appointee, has "violated the law" in not detailing the state's future obligations as required by a 1975 legislative enactment, she said.

Peters has had "an obligation to tell the Board of Equalization what the state's express obligations were," Mrs. Batchelder said. "He did not do this.

"The state is in the mess it is in today because these express obligations were not pointed out. Therefore, the Board of Equalization, under law, could not plan to meet those obligations through the tax levy."

Now, Mrs. Batchelder said, Exon is attempting to "hurry through" the special legislative session "a hasty package to (solve) our financial problems without giving the senators time to effectively study his proposed bills."

Mrs. Batchelder called for "full and complete legislative hearings on the state's current financial problems so people can hear the facts."

Legislative hearings begin at the Statehouse Wednesday.

Mid-State Claims Said 'Unfounded'

Environmentalists claim that the Mid-State Irrigation Project will be detrimental to wildlife in central Nebraska are unfounded, Dr. Les Sheffield, the irrigation development coordinator at the University of Nebraska, said Tuesday.

He said environmentalists had singled out about 12 U.S. Bureau of Reclamation projects in the nation to kill, and, he said, Mid-State and the Oahe Irrigation Project in South Dakota, were two of them.

"They've really made a concentrated effort to try to kill these projects," Sheffield said. With the amount of work and planning already completed, he said, "it would be a terrible waste not to let Mid-State be built. If that's the will of the people, that's the way it'll be."

A referendum is scheduled Nov. 4 on whether to continue for another 15 years the Mid-State Reclamation District, which is needed in order to continue planning for the irrigation project.

A spokesman for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said the Mid-State project would "severely harm existing wildlife resources." Rolf Wallenstrom, the service's area manager in Pierre, S.D., said the result of reduced flows would be to "destroy the values that exist today."

Sheffield said Mid-State was needed to insure "the future well being of the entire area. I don't think there's anyone who wants to see us revert to dry land farming and that's just what could happen without Mid-State."

He said it would take about 30 years to develop and construct an irrigation project.

Finance Officer: ABP On 'Treadmill'

Omaha (UPI) — The former chief financial officer of American Beef Packers Inc. testified Tuesday it would have been nearly impossible for the one-time meatpacking giant to stop a diversion of funds from its mainline creditor.

Thomas J. Clark, former group vice president-finance, testified Frank R. West, ABP board chairman and president, knew of the funding diversion, and he talked to West on a "number of occasions" about the cash shortage.

It was the discovery of the diversion totaling $3.5 million on Dec. 15 which led General Electric Credit Corp. to shelve a new plan involving an $80 million new line of credit for ABP. American Beef filed limited bankruptcy on Jan. 7.

The U.S. government was expected to conclude its case Wednesday against West, Robert E. Lee, group vice president-cattle procurement, ABP and Beefland International Inc., of Council Bluffs, Iowa, an ABP subsidiary. Defense attorneys said their presentation would run at least three days, and presiding U.S. District Judge Robert V. Denney said he was leaving his docket clear next week for the ABP case if the time was needed.

Clark was the first of more than 60 government witness to appear as a "hostile witness" under federal court guidelines. He testified ABP was on a "treadmill," and "we were always discussing how to clear it (the diversion) up."

"But it was almost impossible for the operation of the company to stop that procedure cold," Clark said.

Clark, who joined ABP in July of last year, said he became aware of the diversion in August or September of 1974 and was told it could have been occuring "a year and a half or two years before my employment."

At one time, Clark said he heard the diversion peaked at $8 million, but he couldn't verify it. He said the diversion was started to speed up collections and because "at times we were short of cash."

When asked by the government if he told West that without the money from the diversion ABP didn't have the cash to operate on, Clark replied, "I'm sure I did."

When asked by the defense, Clark said he didn't go into detail with West about the diversion.

"It was sort of vague," Clark said. "To some extent I told him we were in an overdrawn position and that was the extent of the conversation."

Clark said, however, he believed General Electric Credit shorted ABP about $2.5 million several days prior to the bankruptcy filing. That shortage, Clark said, caused ABP checks to bounce on various banks.

On Dec. 31 of last year, Clark said he was informed by Lowell Smith, ABP money manager, that ABP had been "shorted" about $1.5 million from GECC.

"I was pretty hot about it," Clark said. "GECC did not deny it."

Later Clark said a $1 million difference between GECC's and ABP's figures was uncovered, but "we never did get it resolved."

Clark said ABP was "constantly fighting with GECC" to get GECC wire drafts to cover ABP checks "in on a timely basis."

Clark said he flew by private jet to GECC's Stamford, Conn., headquarters Jan. 6 in a last ditch effort to obtain more funding. He said he thought there were "personality conflicts" between ABP and GECC officials and wanted to see GECC's president.

However, Clark met instead with Bernard Long, the chief supervisor of ABP's account. He said GECC officials sent the American Beef delegation outside Long's office for one or two hours.

Clark said Long came out of the meeting and said "he wouldn't come back to Omaha without his attorney and to go ahead and file a Chapter XI" under the federal bankruptcy statutes.

At the time ABP filed the bankruptcy petition, Clark said its assets exceeded its liabilities by $22 million.

Earlier, William L. Edwards, former ABP treasurer, testified West authorized the payment of a certified check for $381,815.94 to Omaha hog buyers on Jan. 3. The government contends some $800,000 in preferred payment checks were written to West-controlled businesses, his friends and associates while other creditors were left holding debts of more than $25 million.

Testimony has shown Kleth Marquardt, of Bellevue, president of Omaha Hog Buyers, to be a business associate of West's.

"I called Mr. West and discussed with him the payment of this amount, you know," Edwards said, "because we were so tight for cash, the certified check might be considered a preferential payment at the time and he told me to pay this amount."

Edwards said to the best of his knowledge Omaha Hog Buyers had "never" been issued a certified check before.

When asked if he checked with West before he wrote other certified checks prior to the bankruptcy filing, Edwards said "no."

"The discussion that I had on the first check with Marquardt was pretty much broad, 'pay-the-people-who-are-coming-in' type of statement so I did not further check with him," Edwards said.

Edwards said negotiations by ABP for Arab money involving a "substantial amount $70 million or $80 million" failed to materialize.

When asked by the defense of ABP was "charting a course" for bankruptcy, Edwards replied, "No sir, absolutely not."

JFK Sale Problem Limited Market

Omaha (UPI) — The trustee for defunct John F. Kennedy college in Wahoo Tuesday said a limited market and hopes of selling the main campus as a unit pose the biggest problems for a quick sale of the property.

Merle Nicola, federal bankruptcy trustee, said three public auctions failed to produce a buyer for the main campus, and a bid of $125,000 by Wisconsin Synod of the Lutheran Church, which wanted to turn the campus into a high school, was rejected as too low.

He said the appraisal price for the main campus is $394,000, with the entire campus appraised at $660,000. Property off the main campus area will be sold piecemeal, which includes student housing and undeveloped land.

"We're trying to hold the main campus intact, in case someone would want to open a school on it," Nicola said. "We've got one person negotating for three acres and a little white house that was used for student housing."

However, Nicola said he had received no new offers for the main campus area and doubted that a legislative proposal to allow the state to buy the property for use as a veteran's home would be approved by the 1976 Nebraska Legislature.

The campus buildings were being made ready this week for winter and the property will be listed with a real estate agent within 30 days.

"Unless the property can be utilized for something else," Nicola said, "you've got a problem making a sale. The biggest problem is a limited market."

Youngster's Death Hikes Highway Toll

By The Associated Press

Nebraska's mounting highway fatality toll for 1975 went up another notch Tuesday with the death of a Kearney boy.

Seven-year-old Coby Howsden died Tuesday in a Kearney hospital of injuries suffered when he was struck by a car while walking to school Monday.

Officials said the boy was crossing a street when he was struck by a car driven by James L McKee, 38, of Kearney

The boy suffered head injuries and both his lets were broken.

His mother, Mrs. Leonard D. Howsden, and his grandparents, Mr and Mrs. Leonard Bloys, were killed in a traffic accident in July of 1972

The boy is survived by his father and stepmother, three sisters, a brother and a stepbrother.

The death hiked Nebraska's 1975 traffic fatality toll to 316, compared with 321 at this time last year.

Meanwhile, the Grand Island Police Department Tuesday identified the victim of a Monday accident in that city as Ruth E. Otto, 77, of Phillips. She was killed when her car was in collision with a gasoline tank truck at a Grand Island intersection.

Identification had been withheld pending notification of next of kin.

State's Dry Weather Is Good For Harvest

By The Associated Press

Although dry weather again aided harvest over the state last week, it caused some corn to drop ears and soybean pods to shatter, the Division of Agricultural Statistics reported.

Topsoil and subsoil moisture supplies remained unchanged from last week with most counties short. A year ago topsoil and subsoil were also short in virtually all counties.

Corn harvest continued to make excellend progress with nearly 80% of the crop harvested at this time. This is ahead of last year's 65% and the normal pace of 35% for this point in the year.

Corn moisture content is running mostly in the 12 to 18% range.

Sorghum harvest is now over 95% completed, compared to 75% last year and 55% for normal years. Moisture content is running 10 to 18%.

Soybean harvest is nearing completion statewide, compared with 90% a year ago and the normal at 80%.

Wheat condition over the state has been hampered by the continuously dry weather and has therefore been assessed as poor by 21% of the counties reporting. Sixty-nine per cent is fair and 10% is good. Some counties report spotty stands and below normal growth.

Sugar beet harvest continues, but at a slow pace due to the warm weather and possibility of spoilage.

Pasture and range feed supplies were 91% short in the counties reporting. Cattle continued to be moved to sorghum and stalk fields as they became available.

Moisture received throughout the state during the past week included:

'Untouchable' Back At His Desk In O'Neill

O'Neill (UPI) — Some 53 years ago a young man left this small farming-ranching community on a hog train to seek his fortune in the legal profession.

William J. Froelich finished law school at Georgetown University in 1926 and he wound up working for the U.S. Justice Dept. in Omaha. His work in liquor and narcotics cases during the prohibition era earned him a wide reputation and an appointment by Mabel Walker Willebrant, assistant attorney general, to a group known initially as the "Secret Six."

That group of attorneys traveled across the nation handling critical cases and later became synonymous with "The Untouchables."

Among Froelich's cases was the prosecution of Al (Scarface) Capone as well as former Florida Gov. Sidney J. Catts.

In the Capone case, he made legal history when the first income tax evasion conviction based on expenditures — Capone dealt on cash only — was handed down.

Catts was indicted for aiding in the manufacture of counterfeit money but a jury found him innocent.

Six years ago, the name of William J. Froelich was back in the news. He was again fighting but a different kind of fight. Those news accounts were about "the last of the Untouchables" and his fight for life. He had suffered a stroke.

He has now returned to the desk he sat behind for 42 years as head of a Chicago law firm formed in 1933 when he resigned from a job with the Treasury Dept. where he helped Walter J. Cummings, an assistant to Secretary Wil H. Woddin, set up the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

But instead of being in Chicago, that desk is now located in the basement of the First National Bank in O'Neill. He is chairman of the board of that bank and has other business interests which he keeps track of from his desk.

Even though he still suffers from a speech impediment as a result of his stroke, Froelich and his wife, Irma now feel the battle begun at the onset of that stroke has been won.

Despite heading a Chicago firm, ties with his home community remained virtually unsevered through the years.

In 1936 he moved his family and children from Chicago to O'Neill and became a 650-mile weekend commuter via the Milwaukee Road, a railroad he first served as a legal assistant and later as a director.

Reminiscing his long career, Froelich said he has only one wish and that one he voiced to a newspaper reporter in 1954.

"If I had my life to live over I would change one thing. I would get closer to God earlier in life."

Unemployment Fund Down By One Third

Nebraska's unemployment fund total of $35.3 million is down more than a third from a year ago, but government officials say the state is in better shape than many others.

The fund is supported by a tax on employers. Out-of-work Nebraskans are currently drawing about $3 million from the fund each month.

In Mid-November, state Labor Department officials and an advisory council will meet to come up with an employer tax rate for 1976.

Eldon Peterson, associate director of the unemployment insurance division, declined to predict the future of the fund and the employer tax rate, but he said "with the current high drawdown, our advisory group is going to have to really wrestle with the charts in setting the 1976 rate."

Ten states have received federal loans to continue unemployment payments because of deficiencies in their funds.

Reprise By Harris

Hollywood (UPI)—Richard Harris will reprise his role as a captive Englishman in "The Return of a Man Called Horse."

Creator Of 'Erma' Asked To Explain

Grand Island (UPI) — The Hall County Board Tuesday decided to give the creator of Erma's Desire, the interstate bicentennial sculpture work the board criticized for failing to represent Nebraska's heritage, a chance to explain his work.

The board, which held a lengthy discussion on the suggestion, voted to allow the artist, John Raimondi, to appear before the board on Nov. 18. Board members said that regardless of their feelings about the abstract art work, Raimondi should be given an opportunity to explain his work.

The work is one of 10 sculptors selected for placement at rest areas along Interstate 80 in Nebraska to commemorate the nation's 200th birthday. Erma's Desire was to be placed at a rest area near Grand Island, but the board has refused to issue a permit for its placement.

In other action, the board went on record as opposing the Platte River Level B study and will send letters to Gov. J. James Exon and the Lower Loup Natural Resources District. The district had asked the board to take a stand on the study.

The supervisors also decided to ask the county attorney for an opinion on whether the county is liable for the erection of school crossing signs. In the past, the county has put up the signs and then charged the school district the costs.

However, a school district between Alda and Wood River is refusing to pay. Supervisor Ben Camp said Sam Grimminger, the county attorney, has agreed verbally that the county is to put up the signs, but the board wants Grimminger's opinion in writing.

NW Power District To Get $2.4 Million

Hay Springs (UPI) — The Northwest Rural Public Power District of Hay Springs has received approval of a $2.48 million loan.

The money, according to the district, will be used to build lines and convert present lines from 7,200 volts to 14,400 or from a single phase line to a three-phase line, or both.

The district hopes to have the new lines installed and conversion of existing lines completed by June 1976.

The district has also installed new equipment in an attempt to increase peak summer load capacity. Two new transformers were delivered to the Mirage Flats and Gordon substations.

The Mirage Flats unit will eventually take over all of the flats area, relieving the Hay Springs and Dunlap substations of at least a third of their load.

Future district plans call for a new substation for the flats area.

The Mirage Flats transformer was purchased for $53,475 while the one at Gordon cost $66,655.

The new unit at Gordon will replace an existing one and will double the substation capacity.

Other future district plans include a new building in Hay Springs as well as rebuilding more lines, moving others and burial of still others.

Rolland Skinner, district manager, said he hopes all planned work will be done by June of next year.

ConAgra Says Preferred Dividends To Be Resumed

Omaha (AP) — ConAgra Inc. reported Tuesday that preferred dividends would be resumed and a 5% dividend would be paid on common stock.

Net earnings in the quarter ended Sept. 21, 1975 were $7,348,970, after a special tax credit of $3 million. Fully diluted earnings were $1.99 a share.

The total compares with a loss of $1,599,493 or a 53-cent loss per share, both primary and diluted, for the first quarter a year ago.

The company told stockholders that sales were $122,768,899 for the first quarter, compared with $135,704,100 in the same quarter a year ago.

"Most of the decrease in dollar sales is due to lower ingredient costs which, in turn, allowed lower prices on ConAgra's finished product," said Claude I. Carter, president and chief executive officer.

"While our first quarter results are obviously very gratifying and demonstrate a continuing momentum in the profitability we established in the second half of last year, there are exceptional circumstances.

"Our earnings cannot be expected to continue at this rate throughout the remainder of the fiscal year," Carter said. "Even so, we do expect this to be a record year."

The exceptional circumstances he mentioned were unusually strong earnings from poultry operations and a portion of ConAgra's operating loss carry forward was utilized to reduce first quarter taxes by $3 million.

ConAgra's board of directors voted to resume payment of all accumulated preferred dividends, which were suspended in September of 1974. Preferred dividend payments will be made to preferred stockholders on Nov. 14.

The directors also declared a 5% stock dividend on the common stock outstanding. The dividend is payable to Dec. 5 to common shareholders of record on Nov. 14.

City Of Omaha To Seek Okay For Wheel Tax

Omaha (AP)—The City of Omaha will seek permission of the State Legislature in January for a wheel tax to all who regularly use Omaha's streets.

Seven other major changes will be requested in the legislative session, as a result of a meeting of Mayor Edward Zorinsky and department heads Monday.

Most have been discussed publicly before, but two that apparently have not been discussed would increase fees the public pays to the Municipal Court, but decrease witness fees.

Among other proposals were:

—Enabling legislation for police and fire auxiliary forces. Zorinsky wants it in case of strikes by police and firemen and to help police with normal duties.

—Authorization for an income tax credit when an owner improves property in a substandard or blighted area.

—An enabling law to set up historical preservation districts.

—Increased sewer hookup charges on new homes.

—Authorization for city government to bill school districts for collection of fees that go to support schools.

Texas Firm's Earnings Down

New York (AP) — Texas Instruments Inc.'s third quarter earnings fell 13% to $16 million from last year's $18.5 million, the company said.

The company, which manufacturers electronic equipment and components, said demand for data terminals, mincomputers, semiconductors, and electrical controls of appliances increased domestically.

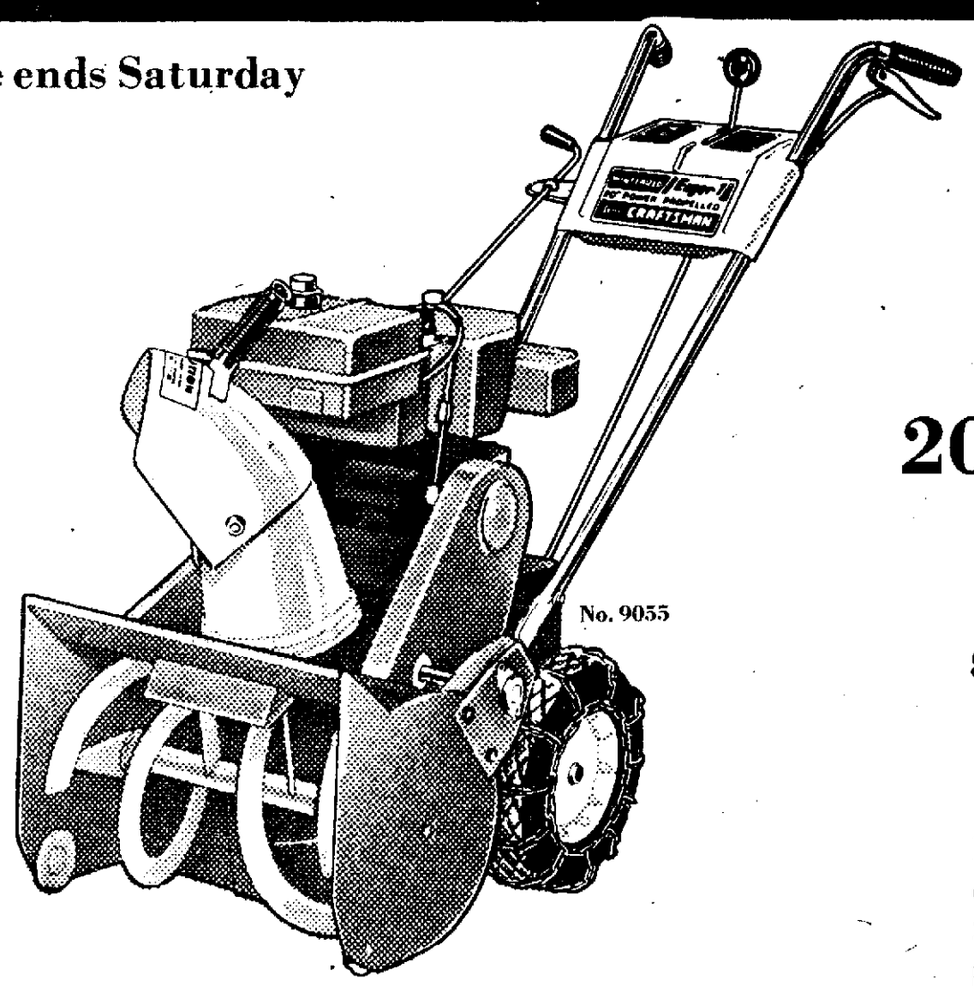

Earnings per share were 70 cents, compared to 81 cents in 1974. Sales were off 17%, dropping from $374.9 million to $312.9 million.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SIDNEY OMARR ☆

Wednesday, October 29, 1975

I challenge signers of a recent anti-astrology statement to prove that they have actually made a study of the subject. One Nobel prize winner told me the only "study he made was when he read the encyclopedia. This, however, did not deter him from signing a statement condemning astrology. A vast maiority of the signers don't know enough to even cast a horoscope. Let us not slip back to the dank, cold, dark ages when the weight of authority told us what to do, say and think.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Bring forth creative resources. Imprint style. Organize priorities. One in authority makes room for you at more elevated position. Welcome chance to show what you can do. Cancer, Capricorn persons could be very much in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A review of home economics could be in order. Highlight security, better relations with parent or authority figure. You get chance now to conclude a major transaction. Property, real estate might be involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Stress greater independence in dealings with neighbors, relatives. Leo, Aquarius figure in picture. Your ideas can be put to good use — reception for your concepts is likely to be favorable. A short trip could be on agenda.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on money, possessions, ability to collect what you need. You can put together missing links. You become involved in teaching project. Your hunch pays off — your intuitive intellect is sharply honed. You could win a wager!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent on personality, increased social activity, travel and added recognition. Gemini, Sagittarius persons are likely to be in picture. Cycle is such that circumstances favor your efforts. A wish will be fulfilled.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Some restrictions become more evident than in recent past. You learn how far you can go, who is defending your interests behind the scenes. Acuarius, Taurus Leo figure in picture. Accent is on organization, secret meeting, message from hospital or institution.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent on romance, creativity, responsibility, the "heating up" of a relationship. Cancer, Capricorn figure prominently. Be ready for change, travel, variety. Restless Gemini could provide incentive to shake off status quo.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You step on solid ground. You get family backing for ambitions, special project. Taurus, Libra could be in picture. Emphasis is on dignity, reconciliation, standing in community, promotion and unique honor.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Look beyond the immediate. What glitters could be tinsel. Know it and heed "inner voice." You know — in your heart of hearts — what should be done. Spiritual revelation is very much in picture. Long-distance travel, communication is featured.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Check financial resources, especially where contracts are concerned. Partner, mate is more-than-ordinarily concerned about assets. You get chance to organize, to make favorable impression on one who "pulls strings."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Spotlight on ability to work with one whose ideas oppose your own. A relationship undergoes thorough test. Analyze what it is you wish to keep, what can be discarded. Aries, Libra could figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stress creativity, independence, willingness to pioneer a project. Stop following — it is appropriate now for you to lead. Vitality makes a comeback. You see more clearly — and a Leo aids your cause.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY — you are intuitive, a natural teacher, stubborn, dynamic, progressive and loyal. Aquarius, Leo persons play important roles in your life. Setbacks are finished — you are on "comeback trail." You may be in business for yourself in 1976. If single, marriage is on horizon. If married, there could be an addition to family.

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Testimony Ends In Gretna Road Dispute

Omaha (AP) — U.S. District Judge Albert Schatz has heard final arguments in a two-year dispute between the state and Ron Patterson, a Gretna area farmer-developer.

The trial ended Monday after five days of testimony on whether the State of Nebraska should be allowed to build a road up to the edge of a recreation area, removing hundreds of trees.

The case is believed to be the first of its type heard in Nebraska.

The road involved, 4.1 miles of Neb. 31 from the Interstate 80 turnoff to a point near the old Gretna fish hatchery, is graveled. The proposed project would cost $1.5 million to $2 million.

James M. Gleason, representing Patterson, said the state should be required to file an environmental impact statement with the federal government, since a "whole new road" is proposed, built to major highway specifications.

In final arguments, Gleason said more than 900 "healthy trees would be cut," thereby damaging the environment.

He said the state did not examine an alternate route, such as one suggested by a witness for Patterson, as is required by federal law.

Near the road, Gleason said, are endangered Indian artifacts dating to the 12th Century. The attorney also argued that it is not logical for the state to stop a high-speed road at the edge of the recreational area, where the speed suddenly drops to 20 m.p.h. The 6.1 miles of Neb. 31 running through the recreational area should be included in the project, he said and the environmental effect should be assessed.

Gary Welch, assistant attorney general, and Steve Muehlberg, assistant U.S. attorney representing the secretary of transportation, argued for the state. They said the state and federal agencies involved were given a chance to review the project but did not object to it and that designing a road for the entire 11 miles is unrealistic, since the state has money only for 4.1 miles. A good road is needed to serve the Thousand Oaks housing development and recreational area, Welch and Muehlberg said, and there is "no evidence" of substantial numbers of Indian artifacts in the area.

The two said the existing road is a threat to safety and a bridge on the road should be replaced.

With regard to the loss of trees, they said, nature will readjust to the new situation once the road is built.

Welch and Muehlberg said an alternate route as proposed by Patterson — who owns the Thousand Oaks development — would split farms and relocate families and this would have a severe effect on the environment.

They said the project is "very limited, very small," and therefore does not require an environmental impact statement.

Sierra Club Asks Urbom Rule On Construction Authorization

U.S. District Judge Warren K. Urbom took under advisement Tuesday the Sierra Club's request for a ruling on the legality of construction authorization for the Nebraska Public Power District (NPPD) Gentleman Power Station at Sutherland.

In the latest installment of a two-year struggle over pollution the 650-megawatt plant may cause, attorneys for both sides argued the case through Tuesday morning.

Sierra Club attorney Tony Ruckel questioned NPPD's claims about the sulfur content of its coal and the effect of the air pollution on crops in the Sutherland area.

Speaking for NPPD, Lincoln attorney Robert Crosby said the Sierra Club case amounted to "much ado about nothing."

Crosby said a preponderence of evidence about the plant's ability to meet pollution standards convinced the State Department of Environmental Control (DEC) to allow the plant to be built.

In fact, Crosby said he thought the DEC showed excessive caution by requiring NPPD to have the coal to be burned at the plant tested for sulfur levels before being shipped to Sutherland.

The Sierra Club is seeking installation of a scrubber on the plant to remove sulfur dioxide. NPPD claims a scrubber is too expensive and is unreliable.

Crosby said the federal clean air act's ban on significant deterioration of air quality in clean air regions, such as Sutherland, does not apply to the Gentleman Station since it is sanctioned by a grandfather clause in the act.

2 Counties Given Special Attention

By United Press International

There's no room for beginner errors in two counties where special means will be used to protect the voting rights of those who claim a language other than English as their native tongue, Secretary of State Allen Beermann said Tuesday.

In an interview, Beermann said the amended voting rights act of 1965 imposes no small task on his office and upon officials in Thurston and Scotts Bluff Counties.

"We are going to have to be extremely careful," the state's chief voting officer said. "Otherwise, you always face the possibility of having the federal government stepping in and declaring your election null and void."

Under that voting rights act, the basic concept is to protect fully the right of all Americans to vote up to and including special assistance in another language.

Earlier, Nebraska was informed those two counties fell within the act's jurisdiction and at first Beermann had little information on exactly how the state and local election officials were to meet the terms of the law.

Beermann said he now has some preliminary guidelines from the U.S. Justice Department and they were mailed to the two counties Monday.

He said as near as he can tell, all ballots will have to be printed, in Scotts Bluff County for example, in English and Spanish as will election laws, voter instructions, sample ballots and public notices.

In Thurston County, printing won't be enough, Beermann said, because the situation there centers on an Indian language that is primarily an oral rather than printed one. That apparently means interpreters will be the major requirement there, he said. In Scotts Bluff County, Beermann said only "some" bilingual workers will be needed.

Beermann said he plans to work with such agencies as the Mexican-American Commission, the State Indian Commission and as foreign language departments at learning institutions.

As yet, he said costs have not been pinpointed and he said he hopes to be able to rely as much as possible on volunteer help.

The real problem Beermann said he anticipates is not in the handling of names of candidates for political office. He indicated there are possibly a number of options available on how to handle that without a great deal of trouble.

Instead, the secretary of state said, concern within his office centers on such things as constitutional amendments and proposed law changes the voters must decide.

There are currently two laws that are being proposed for enactment by the voters, one of which is a 26-page campaign reform act. That act, he said, must be printed "line for line" in both languages involved. The other potential issue the voters may face is a proposal to legalize marijuana.

On constitutional proposals, the ballot itself must have only a capsulized version. Ahead of the balloting each proposed amendment must be printed in newspapers across the state in full. Again, Beermann said, that must be done line for line in both languages.

Beermann said his primary responsibility is to see that the voting rights act is met. It is up to the counties, he said, to do the actual work. In his advisory and overseer capacity, Beermann said he would be meeting with the county officials involved in December.

10% Of Parents Wouldn't Have Children Again

New York (UPI) — A survey commissioned for a national magazine indicates that one out of 10 American parents would not have children again if they were starting over.

In a copyrighted article, McCall's magazine said the Gallup Poll showed that about 5.5 million parents of children under 18 wouldn't want children again.

The magazine said a similar survey 10 years ago at Princeton University showed only one out of 100 mothers regretted having children.

Huskers To Be Ready For 'The Old Missouri Defense'

By BOB OWENS
Star Sports Editor

When Missouri stunned Alabama on national television in the season opener, the Tigers resurrected what Nebraska football coaches call "the old Missouri defense."

It's effectiveness in that game is shown in the final statistics which show Alabama netted just 31 rushing yards — lowest since 1970 and 118 yards overall, also the slimmest haul by a Paul Bryant-coached team in the last 71 games.

"The last two years Missouri has been in a basic 5-2 defense," Cornhusker coach Tom Osborne said Tuesday after he worked his offensive team against the "old" defense.

"They resurrected it for the wishbone, figuring to catch Alabama off guard," he said. "And they had so much success with it they have stayed with it and thrown it in once and a while."

Osborne said the Tigers have played it enough that Nebraska has to be prepared for it, but noted that against Kansas State last week they were hardly in it at all.

"If they get in it and they are stopping people you might see a lot of it," Osborne said. "It requires extra work because your linemen have to be pretty sharp. Fortunately, we have worked against it some in getting ready for Miami. Miami played it against Oklahoma, but didn't against us, so it's not totally new."

Just having to get ready for it gives it a nuisance value.

The defense has eight men on or close to the line of scrimmage, which gives a team a better chance to throw against it. The problem throwing, though, is that they can send more people after the passer and cause confusion to offensive linemen in some respects, the Husker coach explained.

Missouri has been particularly tough against Nebraka in the era starting with Bob Devaney's first team. Since then the series stands at 7-6 in favor of the Huskers. Missouri won three in a row in 1967, 1968 and 1969 and will be trying to extend its current string over NU to three.

The Husker squad worked on the freshman grass practice field in pads for about two hours Tuesday. Osborne said he would have liked to have used the field inside Ed Weir track, but since a plastic pipe watering system was installed, the field has developed many small holes and it is too dangerous to risk wrecking an ankle.

THE LINCOLN STAR
Sports

The frosh field is flat while the field inside the track is crowned. The passing game can be affected, especially on sideline patterns.

For that reason, Osborne said the Huskers probably will work for a time Wednesday on the AstroTurf field in Memorial Stadium where practices normally are held. This period will be used to get some of the offense on film.

Missouri's Faurot Field, site of Saturday's important Big Eight contest, still has a natural grass surface.

Wingback Curtis Craig, who missed last Saturday's game against Colorado, was running at almost full speed and Osborne said "there's not much question he will be able to play."

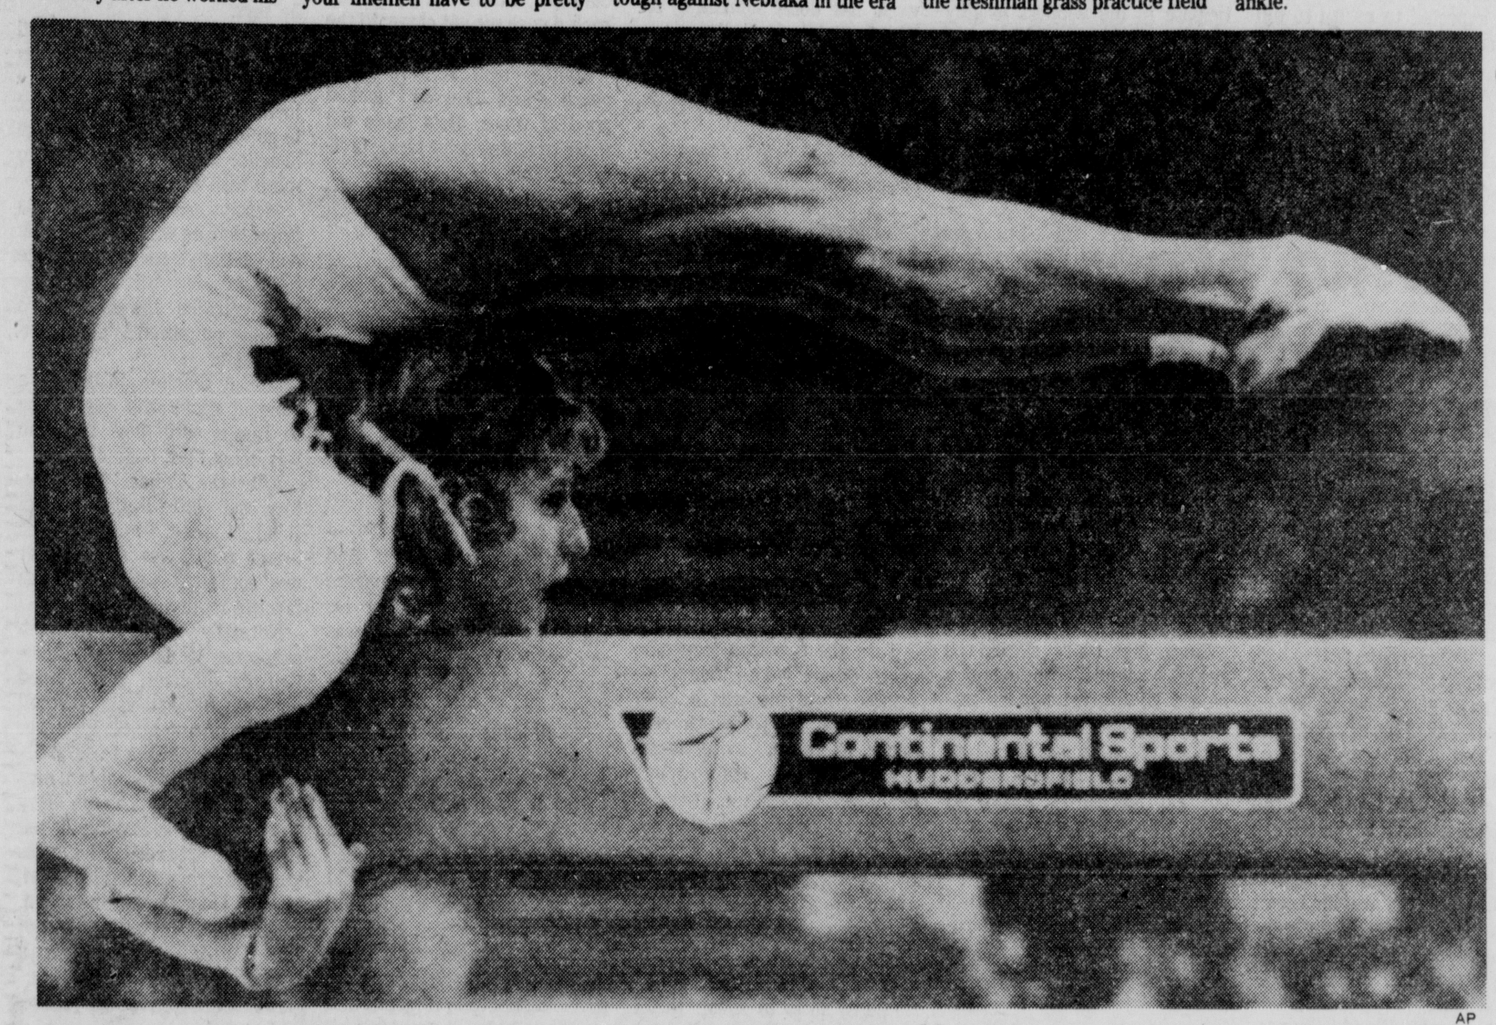

The status of offensive guard and specialty team star Steve Lindquist, however, is doubtful. He has a jammed neck in addition to a slight muscle pull. "If he isn't able to practice Wednesday, We probably won't take him on the trip," Osborne said. "He's awfully valuable on the special teams."

Defensive end Dave Redding also is very doubtful with a knee strain. Both he and Lindquist worked out some Tuesday; but Redding wasn't moving very well.

Offensive tackle Bob Lindquist was missing because of a virus, which Osborne hopes is one of the 24-hour varieties.

"He's one of our five real good offensive linemen and is really important to us," Osborne said. "We have some fair backup guys, but they hadn't played very much until last Saturday."

Linebacker Jim Belka, who injured a knee during spring practice and aggravated the injury in early fall camp, underwent knee surgery last weekend and will be out for the season. The junior from Prairie Village, Kan., started spring drills as the No. 1 weakside linebacker candidate. He has not played this season.

MU Pick Still Pleasing To 'Top-Recruit' Brown

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP)—Tailback Curt Brown says he declined overtures from five Big Eight Conference schools to attend Missouri.

And the coach of the Tigers, Al Onofrio, says he can only applaud the decision of the 5-foot-10, 200-pound Brown, a home state product and top find this season.

"I always wanted to come here," said Brown, who last week stepped into a starting role and galloped for 141 yards and two touchdowns in a 35-3 Missouri win over Kansas State.

"I had offers from Colorado, Oklahoma State, Iowa State, Kansas and Kansas State," he noted, "but I chose Missouri because it's close to home."

Brown's chances with the Tigers were actually based on his performances during spring drills following two seasons with Fort Scott Junior College in Kansas.

Not listed in Missouri's two-deep lineups this fall, he soon proved dependable by averaging four yards on 33 carries through the school's first six games.

A golden opportunity arrived for Brown when he was named to start in place of injured Tony Galbreath in Missouri's game last week.

Then, after fumbling at the end of a 16-yard run on his first carry, he shredded Kansas State's defense at a 6.7-yard clip and was the backbone of a 318-yard Tiger running attack.

"He did a temendous job," Onofrio said afterward. "He got more confidence as he went along, and he's got enough speed to go all the way."

Whether Brown, a product of St. Charles, Mo., sees much action this Saturday against third-rated Nebraska will depend in large part on a tender ankle which has slowed Galbreath for four weeks.

"It's his spot," Brown said ungrudgingly of the key Tiger tailback position. "We watch each other and learn from each other. I'm willing to wait my turn."

Brown also said that whereas he formed respect for Kansas State's hard hitting, he anticipates an even rougher afternoon from Nebraska's Black Shirt defense.

"All the games on our schedule are big from here on out," the junior, a parks and recreation major, said, "but I'd say the one in front of us is the biggest one of all."

1—Adams (8-0)	6—Odell (6-1)
2—Elgin (8-0)	7—Wilsonville (7-0-1)
3—Ruskin (8-0)	8—Giltner (7-1)
4—Shelby (8-0)	9—Trumbull (7-1)
5—Sidney St. Pat's (8-0)	10—Thedford (6-0-1)

Comment — District 1 leader Adams finishes at Barneston Thursday. District 2 leader Elgin hosts Spalding, district 3 pacesetter Bartley plays at Wilsonville and district 4 leader Thedford hosts Brady. Unbeatens Ruskin, Decatur and Sidney St. Pat's likely will miss playoffs.

North's Taylor Earns Honor

By RANDY YORK
Prep Sports Editor

Any 340-yard single game rushing performance is noteworthy. When it happens in Omaha's Metro Conference, the state's most rugged prep league, it's more than noteworthy.

It borders on the unbelievable.

But Frank Taylor's 340 yards rushing last week in a 32-0 Omaha North win over Omaha Ryan should have been even greater, according to his coach, Jerry Wilks.

"It would have been 400, but he had two 25-yarders called back for holding," Wilks points out. "He had an almost unbelievable game."

Taylor's 340 yards on 32 carries, which included touchdown jaunts of 66, 63, 3 and 1 yards, earn the 6-0, 175-pound senior I-back the Sunday Journal and Star's prep Player of the Week award.

All-Time Best?

He accomplished the effort on UNO's AstroTurf. It's believed to be a Metro Conference record and perhaps an all-time Nebraska schoolboy best.

Former Tecumseh standout Tony Davis accumulated 324 yards and that could have been the previous best, although official records are not kept.

"There's no question about it. Taylor's the best back in the Metro," Wilks says. "Tim Wurth (of Burke) and Bob Billinger (of Westside) are good backs, but Taylor is in the class of great high school running backs."

Taylor didn't just burst into prominence. He had rushed for 752 yards in North's first seven games, including a 202-yard performance against eighth-rated Burke and 172 yards against top-rated Westside.

"He just has that natural ability to pick and run," says Wilks. "He does his best job one-on-one. I haven't seen anyone who's been able to tackle him in that situation all year.

"Against Burke, he went 85 yards on the first play," Wilks notes. "Two guys had good, clean shots, but missed. Against Ryan, half his yards were right up the gut on isolations and power plays. That gives you an idea os his strength."

Nebraska Interested

Taylor ran a :04.7 in the 40 last year, but hasn't been timed this year. Nevertheless, "Nebraska is very interested," according to Wilks. "At least they've inquired a lot about him."

Taylor is a solid performer in the classroom, too. "He's a B student, very dedicated," says Wilks. "He's only missed two days of school in four years. Around here at North, that's some kind of record."

Others who'll receive Player of the Week cards include:

Uduak Udofia, Lincoln High — Rushed for 91 yards, scored a touchdown and excelled as defensive back in Links' 10-0 upset win over previously rated North Platte. It was Lincoln High's first win in eight starts.

Kim Baker, York — In win over Class A Beatrice, he rushed for 133 yards on 11 carries and scored two touchdowns. He also punted four times for a 48.75-yard average and keyed offensive attack with outstanding blocking on sweeps. He was credited with eight solo and seven assisted tackles. "It's the best game Kim's ever played for York," according to coach Tom McClelland.

Don Daugherty, Grand Island Central Catholic — After 186-yard performance last week against Hastings Adams Central, this 5-9, 165-pound junior went over 1,000-yard rushing mark for eight games.

Jim Petsch, McCook — Tailback rushed for 162 yards on 22 carries and had touchdown runs of 6 and 29 yards in 25-6 Bison win over Alliance.

Tom Carden, Fremont — Quarterback hit 8 of 20 passes for 155 yards and touchdowns covering 9 and 78 yards as Tigers defeated Columbus, 23-0.

Tom Zitek, David City Aquinas — His 109 yards rushing on 25 carries was the impetus in Monarchs' 16-0 upset of Columbus Scotus.

Jeff Anderson, Centennial — Five-seven, 135-pound senior's 98-yard touchdown catch and 83-yard scoring run less than four minutes later turned tight game against Grand Island Northwest into a runaway.

Rick Vaughn, Omaha Paul VI — Senior linebacker participated in 25 tackles (10 unassisted) and recovered fumble at his own 16-yard line in final minute to preserve 6-0 win over Holy Name.

Mike Novacek, Raymond Central — Senior quarterback came in late in the second quarter and threw a 20-yard touchdown pass in final 37 seconds to give team 12-8 win over Elkhorn Mt. Michael.

Gary Ernst, Hastings St. Cecilia — Junior rushed for 224 yards on 34 carries and scored touchdowns in win over Hebron. Last three-game totals show 528 yards rushing, 7 touchdowns, 1 interception, 4 knockdowns and 26 tackles.

Korey Brill, Bayard — Completed seven of 10 passes for 190 yards and three touchdowns in team's seventh straight win, 30-0, over Minatare.

Mike Steenson, Wolbach — Senior quarterback has completed 55 of 93 passes for 1,204 yards and 20 touchdowns while leading Class D team to seven wins in eight games.

Charles Smith, McCool Junction — Junior halfback rushed for 140 yards on 20 carries, scored two touchdowns and was credited with 10 tackles at safety in 24-20 win over Rising City. He's rushed for 1,003 yards and scored 17 touchdowns in eight games.

Mark Rogers, Sidney — Rushed for 194 yards and a touchdown despite Red Raiders' 27-20 Western Conference loss to unbeaten Kimball.

NU Crew Bids In Four Events

Boston — The University of Nebraska crew Sunday joined 2870 competitors and 685 shells from 134 clubs, schools and colleges in the 11th annual Head of the Charles Regata.

Nebraska competed in 4 of 18 events on the two-day schedule.

The heavyweight men's four covered the three-mile course in 19:14.0 which was good enough to rank 9th out of 40 teams in the Collegiate division and 22 out of 40 in the lite or Olympic Division. Yale won the race in 18:20.7.

Nebraska was hampered in the race by the failure of Boston University to yield to a Nebraska attempt to pass which resulted in forcing the Huskers off course for a mement and a slower time resulted. Boston University was disqualified for their actions.

In making their Boston debut, Nebraska's women's four placed 8th out of 40, finishing with a time of 22:23.4 as compared with first place Yale's time of 20:36.5.

The lightweight men's four finished 22nd out of 40 Nebraska's time was 18:56.2 while the first place U.S. National team finished in 18:04.0.

Nebraska assistant coach Mark Stormberg, in his first race as a singles sculler, finished 7th out of 30 entries in the lightweight Elite or Olympic singles in 22:52.2.

Huskers Favored By 6

The weekly odds listed by Harrah's Reno-Tahoe Racebook show Nebraska a six-point favorite in the Big Eight battle against Missouri Saturday in Columbia.

One thing for sure, the oddsmakers couldn't make a line using comparative scores for the game which will be nationally televised by ABC-TV (Channel 7 locally).

Consider this: Against common opposition, it's a toss-up . . . Nebraska beat Colorado 63-21 . . . Missouri lost to Colorado 31-20 . . . Nebraska squaked by Oklahoma State 28-20 . . . Missouri drubbed Oklahoma State 41-14.

The telecast will begin at 11:30 a.m. and the kickoff is set for noon. The second half of the doubleheader will feature fourth-ranked Southern California against California at Berkeley.

Nebraska hasn't been on a national telecast since 1973 when the Huskers appeared twice. They also had a pair shown nationwide in 1972. They had one regional game in 1972 and two last season. This is their first television appearance this year.

Of course, those figures do not include the national telecasts of bowl appearances.

Bonanza For Big Eight

A school appearing on a national telecast now gets $243,928. Since both NU and MU are from the Big Eight, their shares will be pooled by the conference and distributed to league members. That explains why Oklahoma's ban from TV because of NCAA probation has been so costly to the Big Eight.

Under the NCAA-ABC television contract, the network is permitted to sell 400 minutes of commercials over the entire season, spread evenly through the 20 games on the schedule.

The asking price is $58,000 a minute, but only 87 per cent of the commercial spots have been sold and some were sold below the established rate. Part of the reason is a drop in the ratings from 14 per cent in 1971 to 12 per cent in 1974. Another is the economy.

So much for TV. It's still a question whether viewers will see Missouri tailback Tony Galbreath against the Huskers. He returned to practice Tuesday to test his sore ankle. "He ran fairly well," Coach Al Onofrio said. "The ankle felt pretty good, but he is still not top speed. We'll just wait and see.

Nebraska took a big lead in the "giveaway-takeaway" rankings as a result of their "plus-7" in the turnover battle against Colorado. The Huskers now have taken the ball away from their opponents 15 more times than they have surrendered it on fumbles or interceptions.

The Huskers have had just 11 turnovers to their foes' 26.

Sooners Rank Second

Despite all the giveaways (7) Oklahoma had against Iowa State, the Sooners still are second in the conference at plus-8. What saved them were ISU's six turnovers.

For the year, Oklahoma has had 23 turnovers while forcing foes to lose the ball 31 times. Most of its edge in turnovers came as a result of 10 takeaways from Oregon in the season opener.

Here's how the rest of the conference stands: Kansas, plus 4; Missouri, even (21 each way); Colorado, minus 4; Iowa State and Kansas State, minus 5; Oklahoma State, minus 6.

Here are the other odds for Saturday listed by Harrah's: Oklahoma, 17 over Oklahoma State; Kansas, 13 over Kansas State; and Colorado, 7 over Iowa State.

Nebraska's fourth-place ranking in total defense suffered in the Colorado game. The Huskers now are ninth with an average yield of 230.6 yards a game. That's up from last week's mark of 193.3. Oklahoma jumped two notches to tenth with 231.9 a game.

The Husker splurge of 63 points moved their scoring average to 35.6 a game, fourth in the nation and just three-tenths of a point behind Ohio State. The top two are Alabama (37.4) and Texas (37.0).

Wahoo Neumann In State Playoffs

By RANDY YORK
Prep Sports Editor

Wahoo Neumann, the Sunday Journal and Star's top-rated Clas C-1 football team, can take a slow freight into next weekend's state high school playoffs.

That is to say Neumann can lose to West Point Central Catholic Friday night and still qualify for the state playoffs.

It's a different story though for Class C-2's Scribner, Class D Alliance St. Agnes and eight-man's Adams, the other three top-rated teams in the lower classes.

They're thinking one thing — win.

St. Agnes needs a victory over Class C-1-rated Bayard to withstand a challenge in district 4 from Callaway.

Need Victories

Adams must score a win over Barneston to maintain its edge over district 1 pursuer Ruskin. Scribner must defeat Omaha Holy Name to insure its district championship.

Callaway and Ruskin both have completed regular season play and pin their respective playoff hopes on St. Agnes and Adams getting upset.

Both runnerup teams are unfortunate victims of district placement. Callaway may have the toughest pill to swallow. Its 48.25 point average is the second best in the entire Class D ranks behind St. Agnes.

Although the four No. 1-rated clubs in the lower classes should pass final weekend assignments, it won't be as easy for other highly rated teams.

Plainview, the No. 2 team in Class C-1, plays at seven-time Class B winner Pierce Friday night. Norfolk Catholic and Battle Creek, a pair of unbeatens in the same class, battle Friday night in Norfolk.

Joining St. Agnes with rugged Class D tests this weekend are second-ranked Nelson, third-ranked Lawrence, fifth-ranked Homer and sixth-ranked Loomis.

Nelson at Alma

Nelson plays at Class C-2's fourth-ranked Alma and Loomis hosts C-2's eighth-ranked Pleasanton. Lawrence plays at Hastings St. Cecilia and Homer hosts Ponca. St. Cecilia and Ponca are unrated, but highly respected Class C teams.

Of the four lower class state championship races, Class C-1 may offer the most interesting package, if Neumann, Plainview, Centennial and Gibbon all qualify.

The first three have gained solid rating reputations by not only dominating from within their own classes, but also by scoring impressive victories over Class B opponents.

Eight-man competition numbers the most teams where unbeatens are likely to miss the playoffs. Ruskin, Decatur and Sidney St. Pat's figure to miss the playoffs by finishing runnerup within their districts despite unbeaten records.

Fourth-ranked Shelby is perhaps an even more unfortunate victim. Since it is a Class C school, Shelby is ineligible for the playoffs.

GOP Members' Opposition Expected

By EDWARD W. HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

Indications are the Republican majority on the Board of Equalization won't go along with Gov. J.J. Exon's proposal to scrap a state financial reserve for fiscal 1975-76.

The three GOP board members, Secretary of State Allen Beermann, Treasurer Frank Marsh and Auditor Ray A.C. Johnson, commented in separate interviews. Exon and his appointed tax commissioner, William Peters, make up the other two votes on the tax-setting board.

Exon's LB4, now pending in the special legislative session, would allow the Equalization Board to ignore a required 5% over-levy when it sets 1976 sales and income tax rates in November.

Exon has said that action, and some budget cutting measures, are needed to avoid dramatic tax increases next year, along with an $11 million deficit.

The bill would also allow the board to ignore express obligations for the same one-year period.

Exon aide William Hoppner said Tuesday the governor "has pointed out that the circumstances are extraordinary, and that he thinks that at this time we should by-pass the 5% reserve, period."

"The entire question is do we avoid higher taxes or don't we," Hoppner said.

All three Republicans said they felt some reserve was mandatory. They were contacted prior to Hoppner's statement.

"I don't think we should get away from the 5% overlevy at all," said Beermann. "It is just good practice whether you're talking about government, corporations or your personal finances."

Beermann, Marsh and Johnson said they would consider proposals other than 5% for a financial cushion, but each said he felt some cushion was a must.

"I haven't decided on what my bottom line figure for a reserve would be, but some reserve should be there," Johnson said.

"I'm not going to slam my foot down on a figure and preempt the legislative hearings or close my mind, but I do think some reserve has got to be there," Marsh said.

Legislative Unit Will Consider Change In Law

A legislative committee will meet Thursday to consider amendments to Nebraska's 1974 Consumer Protection Act, with an eye towards strengthening the measure, state Sen. Gary Anderson of Axtell reported.

Anderson said Tuesday the amendments were requested by the Consumer Affairs Division of the attorney general's office, and would allow the attorney general to directly initiate legal action.

Anderson's Miscellaneous Subjects Committee was directed to conduct the hearings through a resolution passed by the last legislature, calling for revision of the 1974 bill.

Chambers Says He'll Retaliate If Alleged Incident Not Probed

Omaha (AP) — State Sen. Ernest Chambers says he'll "campaign actively" against a U.S. Senate bid by Omaha Mayor Edward Zorinsky if the mayor doesn't investigate allegations that Omaha policemen had sex relations with a prostitute.

Zorinsky reiterated that he won't order lie detector tests for officers unless there is some evidence.

The mayor said, "If Sen. Chambers has tangible evidence, he should come forth with it now."

Chambers has sent Zorinsky the names of 12 officers he claims had sex relations with Lois Bral. The senator said his investigation leads him to believe Mrs. Bral was correct when she said a few weeks ago she had sex relations with about 60 officers.

Chambers also said he believes speculation that Zorinsky will run for the Senate is correct. If so, Zorinsky's failure to investigate the Bral incident will be "an albatross of coverup" as the mayor starts his campaign, Chambers said.

Zorinsky said it would be an abrogation of Chambers' "sworn responsibility" as an elected official if he has evidence and doesn't come forth with it.

The mayor also said Chambers' threats are "tantamount to blackmail."

Public Safety Director Richard Roth said the officers named could sue Chambers.

"I'm not encouraging a lawsuit. But I think they ought to at least consider it," Roth said.

An internal police investigation was made earlier and Police Chief Richard Andersen said five officers apparently were involved. No discipline was given other than oral reprimands.

Budget Bill Threat To Douglas County

Omaha (AP) — One of the budget bills introduced in the special legislative session will break Douglas County government this year if it is passed, County Budget Director Adrian Jaworski told the County Board Tuesday.

The bill, LB3, would put a third-class priority on $2.16 million which the county would receive for general aid, homestead exemptions and other purposes, he said.

"You cannot take $2.16 million out of this year's budget without breaking us," Jaworski said.

The bill would allow the state to indefinitely postpone payments for homestead exemptions and other purposes until state aid is paid in two higher categories, he said.

Jaworski didn't say what agencies would receive higher priority than the county.

The budget director said county officials were informed of LB3 implications Tuesday. He said they were not aware of the impact when the bill was introduced last week.

County commissioners said they will instruct James Moylan, the county's lobbyist, to fight the bill. Commissioner P.J. Morgan, chairman of the board's legislative committee, said he will appear with Jaworski at public hearings this week on the bill to testify against portions regarded as harmful to the county.

The bill is one of several proposed to help tide the state over what Gov. J. James Exon says is a fiscal crisis.

State GOP Chairman Says Exon Incapable

Republican State Chairman Anne Batchelder of Omaha Tuesday said it is "now obvious" that Gov. J. James Exon and his administration are "incapable of managing the state's fiscal operation."

And there is "serious question" as to whether State Tax Commissioner William Peters, an Exon appointee, has "violated the law" in not detailing the state's future obligations as required by a 1975 legislative enactment, she said.

Peters has had "an obligation to tell the Board of Equalization what the state's express obligations were," Mrs. Batchelder said. "He did not do this.

"The state is in the mess it is in today because these express obligations were not pointed out. Therefore, the Board of Equalization, under law, could not plan to meet those obligations through the tax levy."

Now, Mrs. Batchelder said, Exon is attempting to "hurry through" the special legislative session "a hasty package to (solve) our financial problems without giving the senators time to effectively study his proposed bills."

Mrs. Batchelder called for "full and complete legislative hearings on the state's current financial problems so people can hear the facts."

Legislative hearings begin at the Statehouse Wednesday.

Mid-State Claims Said 'Unfounded'

Environmentalists claim that the Mid-State Irrigation Project will be detrimental to wildlife in central Nebraska are unfounded, Dr. Les Sheffield, the irrigation development coordinator at the University of Nebraska, said Tuesday.

He said environmentalists had singled out about 12 U.S. Bureau of Reclamation projects in the nation to kill, and, he said, Mid-State and the Oahe Irrigation Project in South Dakota, were two of them.

"They've really made a concentrated effort to try to kill these projects," Sheffield said. With the amount of work and planning already completed, he said, "it would be a terrible waste not to let Mid-State be built. If that's the will of the people, that's the way it'll be."

A referendum is scheduled Nov. 4 on whether to continue for another 15 years the Mid-State Reclamation District, which is needed in order to continue planning for the irrigation project.

A spokesman for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said the Mid-State project would "severely harm existing wildlife resources." Rolf Wallenstrom, the service's area manager in Pierre, S.D., said the result of reduced flows would be to "destroy the values that exist today."

Sheffield said Mid-State was needed to insure "the future well being of the entire area. I don't think there's anyone who wants to see us revert to dry land farming and that's just what could happen without Mid-State."

He said it would take about 30 years to develop and construct an irrigation project.

Advisory Board On Bar To Get Lay Members

State Sen. William Hasebroock of Westpoint and Omaha business executive J. D. Anderson have been named lay members of the Nebraska Supreme Court's advisory committee for disciplining attorneys.

The State Bar Association had asked the court to include non-attorneys on the committee.

Anderson is president of Guarantee Mutual Life Co.

Lawyers James Brown of Omaha and J. Taylor Greer of Lincoln were also appointed to the committee to replace John Delehant of Omaha and Bert Overcash of Lincoln.

AL Award To Lynn

Fred Lynn

NEW YORK (UPI) — Fred Lynn, a shy, soft-spoken ex-collegian whose "silver bat" and "golden glove" were largely responsible for bringing the Boston Red Sox their first pennant in eight years, Tuesday was named the American League's Rookie of the Year by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

The 23-year-old center fielder, also the leading candidate for the league's most valuable player award, was named on every one of the Rookie of the Year ballots from 24 baseball writers around the country, two from each AL city. He received 23½ of a possible 24 points as one writer, unable to decide between Lynn and his teammate, Jim Rice, split his vote.

Lynn thus became the fourth Red Sox player to win top rookie honors since the BBWAA originated the award in 1947. Other Red Sox' winners include Walt Dropo in 1950, Don Schwall in 1961 and Carlton Fisk in 1972. Fisk is the only player ever to be unanimously acclaimed as the AL's top rookie.

Only two years off the campus of Southern California, the 6-foot-1, 185-pound Lynn had one of the best rookie seasons in modern times. He batted .331 to finish second to Rod Carew for the AL batting title and also led the league in slugging, runs scored and doubles. In addition he walloped 21 homers and drove in 105 runs.

Lynn enjoyed one of the finest games ever played by a major leaguer on June 18 when he drove in 10 runs against the Detroit Tigers in a 15-1 Boston victory. Lynn rapped out five hits, including three homers and a triple, that night and tied a major league record for most total bases in a game (16).

A left-handed hitter and thrower, Lynn also earned a reputation as one of the league's best defensive outfielders. A graceful fielder with loping strides that reminded old-timers of Joe DiMaggio, Lynn saved many a game for the Red Sox with spectacular catches. He was particularly skilled in the diving catch, knowing by instinct the proper moment to dive for the ball and seldom coming up without it. His arm also drew raves from rival players.

During the World Series against Cincinnati, Lynn, who was born in Chicago, Ill. but now lives in Santa Monica, Calif., batted .280 with seven hits, including a double and a homer, and batted in a club-leading five runs. He also fielded 24 chances without an error and saved a 5-4 victory for Luis Tiant in the fourth game with a superb over-the-shoulder catch off Ken Griffey in the ninth inning.

Lynn, who went to Southern California on a football scholarship but concentrated on baseball after his freshman year, credits the training he received from Trojans' coach Rod Dedeaux with helping him make it to the big leagues so soon.

"Coach Dedeaux drills you so much on fundamentals, over and over in such monotony until they're habit," says Lynn. "It has to help you. There's also that feeling you get there that you can't lose, and you play that way."

One of the most impressive things about Lynn during his first year in the major leagues was his poise. Throughout the entire stretch run for the AL East Division title, and on through the AL playoffs and World Series, the youngster kept his cool and continued to come up with the timely hits and key defensive plays.

"There are things in the majors that make it easier than the minors," said Lynn. "I remember two years ago at Bristol. I was tired near the end of the season and in a slump and thinking, 'Isn't this thing ever going to end?' In the big leagues, not only are the conditions better, but with the crowds and situation, it is easier to get yourself geared mentally to get up every day."

There is one thing about his sensational season Lynn could just as soon do without, however. He does not like being a celebrity.

"I always was shy, at the back of the crowd, the last one to wear flares," said Lynn. "And I'm still not the kind who likes to be a public personality. I believe in signing autographs and I like to talk to people, but public appearances? No way."

In any other year, Rice, the other half of Boston's dynamic duo, might have walked away with top rookie honors. Serving part of the year as a designated hitter before becoming the regular left fielder, the 22-year-old Rice batted .309 with 22 homers and 102 runs batted in. His season ended on a sad note, however, when he broke his wrist against Detroit on Sept. 21, forcing him to miss the playoffs and World Series.

Lynn and Rice were the first pair of rookies from the same team in the league's history ever to bat .300 and drive in 100 runs.

Smoker Scheduled

The second amateur boxing smoker of the season sponsored by the Lincoln Association of Master Barbers is scheduled for Wednesday night at Pershing Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

Many new entries are expected for the card, which will be drawn after weighins at 6 p.m.

Three Omaha clubs, including the Foxhole Club, O'Connor Club and the Omaha Police are expected to bring teams to face the Lincoln clubs for Wednesday's smoker.

Easterday figures to have the top boxers again with Neil Wilhelm, at 145-pounds, who has won his last two bouts including a decision over Gabe Valdez of the O'Connor Club last week in Omaha.

Heavyweights Stan Holen of Verdigre and Doug Metzger of Lincoln are also expected to fight as is 159-pounder Bruce Pearson.

"We're hoping for a much bigger card than last time when we had to contend with the short notice decision of the Parole Board to not allow boxers from the State Penal Complex to fight," said Master Barber President Larry Masters.

"Jim Brown, who coached the complex boxers in the past will bring his team as will Ray Menefee and Easterday," Masters said.

Morgan Heads All-Stars

NEW YORK (UPI) — Second baseman Joe Morgan, catcher Johnny Bench and outfielder George Foster of the world champion Cincinnati Reds were named Tuesday to the UPI's 1975 National League All-Star team.

Morgan, whose ninth-inning single in the seventh game of the World Series enabled the Reds to win their first world championship since 1940, was the only unanimous choice for the team in voting by 20 UPI baseball correspondents around the country.

Also named to the team were first baseman Steve Garvey of the Los Angeles Dodgers, shortstop Larry Bowa of the Philadelphia Phillies, third baseman Bill Madlock of the Chicago Cubs, outfielders Greg Luzinski of the Phillies and Dave Parker of the Pittsburgh Pirates, starting pitchers Tom Seaver of the New York Mets and Randy Jones of the San Diego Padres and relief pitcher Al Hrabosky of the St. Louis Cardinals.

ISU's Hardeman May Start

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Quarterback Buddy Hardeman apparently will draw the starting assignment Saturday when Iowa State hosts Colorado in a Big Eight Conference football game here.

The sophomore signal caller, sidelined with a broken wrist since Oct. 11, resumed fullspeed workouts Tuesday during the Cyclones' two hour drill.

"Hardeman is looking good despite the layoff," said Coach Earle Bruce. "We plan to start him as of now with Tom Mason and Mike Tryon in reserve."

Tryon and middle guard Randy Koch, both sidelined since Saturday with sprained ankles, were expected to return to full workouts Wednesday, Bruce said.

However, starting middle guard Maynard Stensrud probably will miss the Colorado game. Stensrud broke his right hand during a game against Kansas 10 days ago.

Freshman tailback Dexter Green worked with the first team offense Tuesday. "He is showing good movement and speed and positive signs of improvement," Bruce said.

Oklahoma

NORMAN, Okla. (AP)—Most of the University of Oklahoma's walking wounded returned to the practice field Tuesday in preparation for Saturday's intra-state football clash with Oklahoma State.

Split end Billy Brooks and fullback Jim Littrell were the only two players who didn't participate in the Sooners' lengthy practice session, but both ran on their own.

Head coach Barry Switzer said several of his players are still limping, but he was pleased that they were fighting through practice sessions.

Switzer said the sooners had a good practice both offensively and defensively. Oklahoma worked harder than usual on the kicking game.

'Always, in an even ballgame when two teams are evenly matched, the kicking game is very important," Switzer said. "The kicking game has won the Texas game for us the past two years.

"Defensively we had a good practice also. we worked on Oklahoma State's wishbone and shotgun formations."

Kansas State

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Playing old rival Kansas this week has done something for Kansas State's football drills.

"The concentration has really been good," Coach Ellis Rainsberger said after Tuesday's practice.

The coach said he was impressed with sophomore Kerwin Cox, now starting at tailback for Roscoe Scobey who was moved to fullback.

"We've had to shift a lot of personnel around due to injuries," the coach said, and because of that Tuesday's session was spent learning new duties.

Oklahoma State

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP)—Oklahoma State whipped through "a normal workout" behind tightly-closed doors Tuesday as the Cowboys prepared for Saturday's home date with Oklahoma.

"Practice was okay—nothing exceptional," said coach Jim Stanley. "I think we'll build up each day as we get closer to the game."

Stanley said reserve nose-guard Chris Dawson "looked good at times. He's made the move from defensive tackle pretty smoothly.

"Brent Robinson, Phillip Dokes and James White all looked good today."

The Cowboys worked hard on their passing game Tuesday with Stanley claiming: "I was pleased with Charlie Weatherbie's execution and our entire passing game. Scott Burk looked good, too. He's still our No. 1 quarterback."

Kansas

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Although Kansas Coach Bud Moore still expressed concern over the injury situation his team is faced with, he was somewhat more optimistic about it after Tuesday's practice.

Moore announced that nose-guard Jim Emerson would miss Saturday's game with Kansas State but defensive players Tom Dinkel, Steve Jones, Kurt Knoff and Franklin King, who missed workouts for the second straight day, are only listed as doubtful starters now.

"We will have more contact tomorrow," Moore said. "We have a tendency to forget how to hit on Saturday if we don't hit some during the week. I'm more worried about our own people and whether we want to win bad enough than I am worried about what K-State will do."

Moore also said practices would have to be rearranged after the change from Daylight Savings Time to Standard Time. He said practices would start earlier and if some people had classes they would just have to miss practice or part of it.

Ohio State's Griffin Wants National Title

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Archie Griffin, college football's most heralded player, would swap all his personal achievements for one team goal: a national championship.

"I would," the Ohio State senior tailback said Tuesday. "That national championship is the most important."

That's some trade. Griffin was the college game's Player of the Year as its 1974 Heisman Trophy winner. Twice he has been the Big Ten Conference's Most Valuable Player and an All-American. He ranks as the greatest rusher in major college history.

Still, as Ohio State trainer Billy Hill said, "His attitude hasn't changed since the first day he walked through the door. He's so down to earth, humble, unbelievable."

His coach, Woody Hayes, marvels over the way Griffin has handled the swarms of writers and fans this year. Hayes himself has lost his cool in similar situations.

"Arch acts like a little, old man, the way he shows maturity much past his years," said Hayes of the greatest player he's coached in 30 seasons. "I've only seen Arch upset once in his four years here. That was up at Michigan when a defensive back twisted his leg after a tackle.

"I've never heard him swear. I never hear him raise his voice to a teammate in practice."

Griffin says Hayes missed another time when he was upset. "When I was a freshman against Michigan State," he said, "about every time I touched the ball I dropped it."

Earlier in his freshman season, then assistant coach Rudy Hubbard talked Hayes into playing Griffin against North Carolina. He responded with a school record 239 yards.

Since then, he's started 39 straight games, producing a record 28 straight regular season performances of over 100 yards rushing. His 4,730 career yards, reached last week, wiped out Ed Marinaro's record as major football's all-time leader.

All this from a 5-foot-9, 182-pounder? "It's not the size of the dog in the fight, but the size of the fight in the dog," said Griffin, one of seven football-playing sons of a Columbus sanitation worker.

His backfield coach, former Marshall runner Mickey Jackson, said, "He's a giant, but he never makes you feel like he is. Once he steps on that field, that little extra from within comes out."

Hayes relishes talking about Griffin's unselfish leadership.

"Arch could be big-headed. He's just the opposite. When you have the complete affection of every single player on your team, that's something," he said.

Cornelius Greene, quarterback of the No. 1-ranked Buckeyes, knows Griffin as well as any student. They roomed together three years.

"The first time I saw him as a freshman, we were running sprints. Woody Roach and I had run 4.5s for the 40. Back in Washington D.C., we had a lot of 185-190 pound guards. So I thought Arch was a guard.

"I turned to Woody and said, 'Man, you see that guard. He ran a 4.4.'"

Now, the two love to needle each other. "The thing he learned from me was how to dress," said a chuckling Greene, known as "Flam" by his teammates for his flamboyant clothes.

Greene, an outstanding high school basketball player, and Griffin, who never played the game at in high school, serve as the guards on an intramural team. They hassle over their lack of passing.

"Corny likes to shoot. But I come across half court and shoot the ball anyway. He gets on me for it," said Griffin.

Griffin can become the first player in history to win two Heisman Trophies.

Four others, Doc Blanchard of Army (1945), Doak Walker of SMU (1948), Vic Janowicz of Ohio State (1950) and Navy's Roger Staubach (1963) won before their senior years and had the chance. They failed.

Margaret Griffin is sure her fourth son will repeat as the Heisman winner. "When he was in high school, I dreamed Archie was standing with the Heisman Trophy. And I had the dream more than once," she said.

McKay Rumors Continue

Los Angeles (AP) — Talk continues to circulate around John McKay, who isn't saying anything.

Rumors that the coach of the unbeaten Southern California Trojans will be moving to Tampa to take the helm of the National Football League's new franchise there in 1976 have steadily intensified.

McKay's only serious comment is "no comment."

"I'm more interested in what the Trojans are going to do for the rest of the football season," he says.

The Southern Cal coach and athletic director reportedly has been offered an extremely lucrative multiple-year contract to go to Tampa, including fringe benefits which run the total to more than $2 million.

McKay has said numerous times that he will wait until the end of the season to announce his plans, but talk around top NFL circles indicates he's already committed to the expansion team.

McKay earlier joked at a banquet about who was "going to Tampa with me," and who was being "left behind."

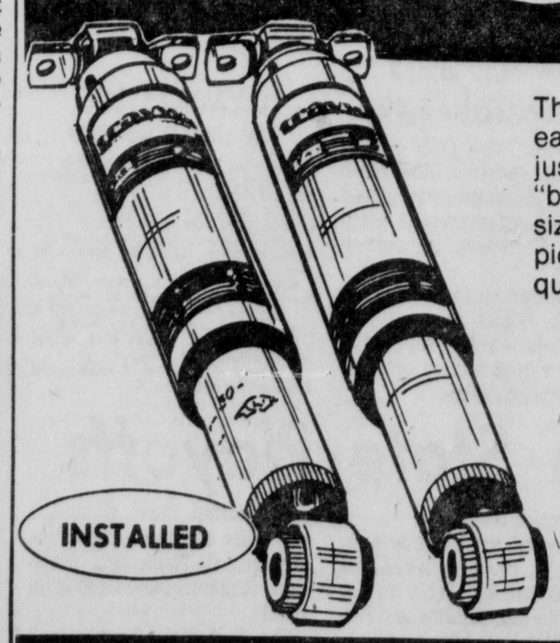

After the Trojans' 24-17 victory over Notre Dame in South Bend Saturday, the tone in the locker room was that McKay was going out a winner in his favorite rivalry.

Normally reserved in such situations, McKay appeared particularly jubilant. He jumped onto a table and said, "You'll always remember this. We never lost to Notre Dame in 1975."

If he is thinking about next year and the Tampa Bay Bucaneers, it is apparently not detracting from his '75 success with the Trojans. Southern Cal, 7-0 and nationally fourth-ranked, is 3-0 in Pacific-8 play and one of the handful of teams with perfect records in the country.

Baseball Players To Hunt

Silver Creek — Major League baseball players from both leagues have joined the list of celebrities coming to the fourth annual Grand National Mixed Bag Hunt beginning here Thursday.

Kansas City Royals Fred Patik and Buc Martinez head the players' list. The two Royals are also the only non-pitchers on the list. Others include Chicago White Sox pitcher Roger Nelson, making his fourth trip to the Grand.

The Minnesota Twins will be sending two pitchers, Tom Burgmeier and Dave Goltz, while the Chicago Cubs will be represented by Darold Knowles and the Milwaukee Brewers are sending Lou Kraus, former Oakland pitcher.

Co-coordinator Larry Meyer also said the women's celebrity team, headed by Texan Pat Auld, was forced to cancel due to illness and illness in families.

Festivities begin Thursday afternoon with a trapshoot and Thursday evening raccoon spotting hunt. Friday opens with a duck hunt in the morning, a brushpile building over noon and a rabbit and squirrel hunt in the afternoon.

Saturday, tabbed Conservation Day, will be highlighted by a pheasant and quail hunt on opening day, a celebrity trapshoot in the mid-afternoon and the closing banquet that evening.

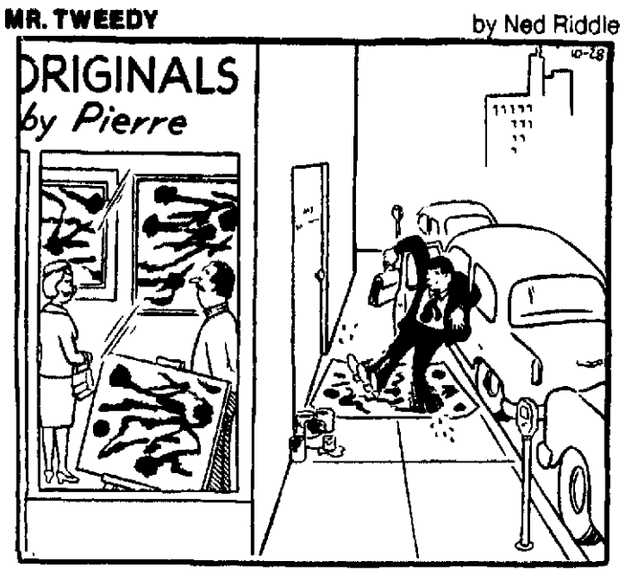

Other celebrities attending this year's hunt, which is aimed at showing there is more to hunting than the killing of wildlife, include Gov. J. J. Exon and National Rifle Assn. executive vice-president Gen. Maxwell Rich.

Goodrich Suspended

Inglewood, Calif. (UPI) — The Los Angeles Lakers Tuesday suspended Gail Goodrich, their disgruntled guard who is embroiled in a contractural dispute with Laker owner Jack Kent Cooke, and replaced him on their roster with 7-footer Jim McDaniels.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ By SIDNEY OMARR ☆

Wednesday, October 29, 1975

I challenge signers of a recent anti-astrology statement to prove that they have actually made a study of the subject. One Nobel prize winner told me the only "study he made was when he read the encyclopedia. This, however, did not deter him from signing a statement condemning astrology. A vast majority of the signers don't know enough to even cast a horoscope. Let us not slip back to the dank, cold, dark ages when the weight of authority told us what to do, say and think.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Bring forth creative resources. Imprint style. Organize priorities. One in authority makes room for you at more elevated position. Welcome chance to show what you can do. Cancer, Capricorn persons could be very much in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) A review of home economics could be in order. Highlight security, better relations with parent or authority figure. You get chance now to conclude a major transaction. Property, real estate might be involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Stress greater independence in dealings with neighbors, relatives. Leo, Aquarius figure in picture. Your ideas can be put to good use — reception for your concepts is likely to be favorable. A short trip could be on agenda.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Emphasis on money, possessions, ability to collect what you need. You can put together missing links. You become involved in teaching project. Your hunch pays off — your intuitive intellect is sharply honed. You could win a wager!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Accent on personality, increased social activity, travel and added recognition. Gemini, Sagittarius persons are likely to be in picture. Cycle is such that circumstances favor your efforts. A wish will be fulfilled.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Some restrictions become more evident than in recent past. You learn how far you can go, who is defending your interests behind the scenes. Acuarius, Taurus Leo figure in picture. Accent is on organization, secret meeting, message from hospital or institution.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Accent on romance, creativity, responsibility, the "heating up" of a relationship. Cancer, Capricorn figure prominently. Be ready for change, travel, variety. Restless Gemini could provide incentive to shake off status quo.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You step on solid ground. You get family backing for ambitions, special project. Taurus, Libra could be in picture. Emphasis is on dignity, reconciliation, standing in community, promotion and unique honor.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Look beyond the immediate. What glitters could be tinsel. Know it and heed "inner voice." You know — in your heart of hearts — what should be done. Spiritual revelation is very much in picture. Long distance travel, communication is featured.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Check financial resources, especially where contracts are concerned. Partner, mate is more-than-ordinarily concerned about assets. You get chance to organize, to make favorable impression on one who "pulls strings."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Spotlight on ability to work with one whose ideas oppose your own. A relationship undergoes thorough test. Analyze what it is you wish to keep what can be discarded. Aries, Libra could figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) Stress creativity, independence, willingness to pioneer a project. Stop following — it is appropriate now for you to lead. Vitality makes a comeback. You see more clearly — and a Leo aids your cause.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY — you are intuitive, a natural teacher, stubborn, dynamic, progressive and loyal. Aquarius, Leo persons play important roles in your life. Setbacks are finished — you are on "comeback trail." You may be in business for yourself in 1976. If single, marriage is on horizon. If married, there could be an addition to family.

Here is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It's a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

Bell Tops In Rushing

By The Associated Press

Southern California's Ricky Bell has a 176.1 yards-per-game rushing average to lead the nation's collegians, weekly statistics released Tuesday by the National Collegiate Athletic Association show.

Bell's average per game is almost 40 yards more than the No. 2 man, Long Beach State's Herb Lusk.

Gene Swick of Toledo continues as the leader in the passing and total offense departments while Brown's Bob Farnham is rated No. 1 in pass catching.

Swick has a completions-per-game mark of 18.0 yards on 144 completions in 226 passing attempts and over-all has accounted for 1,913 yards for a 239.1 yard average in total offense.

Butterfield Honored By Big 8

Kansas City, Mo. (UPI) — Nebraska cornerback Dave Butterfield had a particularly good reason to play with more than his usual skill Saturday against Colorado.

The 5-10, 182-pounder was a high school quarterback at Kersey, Colo., and was bypassed by the Buffaloes.

"It was a particularly important game for Dave because he was someone they (Colorado) overlooked a couple of years ago," said Nebraska coach Tom Osborne.

"Of course, that can happen to anyone. I'm sure there have been Nebraska players we have overlooked who have gone on and been fine players somewhere else."

Butterfield was shifted to defensive back at Nebraska and, after a red-shirt year, became a starter as a sophomore last season.

Butterfield was one of many Nebraska defensive players who were impressive Saturday, in Cornhuskers 63-21 victory over the nation's 10th-ranked team.

Butterfield made eight tackles, five unassisted, recovered two fumbles and broke up a pass.

For his efforts, Butterfield Tuesday was named the Big Eight defensive player of the week.

As for the fumble recoveries, Osborne said, "mostly, that's a case of being in the right place at the right time.

"And there were a lot of balls laying around on the ground, too. He had a lot of opportunities."

Colorado fumbled seven times, losing six.

Butterfield was a unanimous choice for the weekly defensive award by the conference's three-man panel of newsmen.

Other nominees were Iowa State tackle Tom Randall, Oklahoma State tackle James White, Kansas safety Chris Golub, Missouri end Bob McRoberts and Oklahoma linebacker Bill Dalke.

Midland Adds Another Game

Fremont — The Midland Warriors, rated eighth in the NAIA, and Texas Lutheran College of Seguin, Tex. also rated in the top ten, have agreed to meet in an additional game Nov. 15 at 2 p.m. in Seguin.

It will be the first meeting for the two small-school football powers who both went undefeated in 1974. Both teams are currently 7-1.

The Texas Bulldogs won the 1974 NAIA division II championship defeating Missouri Valley 42-0 in the finals, while Midland captured the Mineral Water Bowl over Friends University in post season play.

Huskers To Be Ready For 'The Old Missouri Defense'

THE LINCOLN STAR
Sports
Wednesday, October 29, 1975 51

By BOB OWENS
Star Sports Editor

When Missouri stunned Alabama on national television in the season opener, the Tigers resurrected what Nebraska football coaches call "the old Missouri defense."

It's effectiveness in that game is shown in the final statistics which show Alabama netted just 31 rushing yards — lowest since 1970 and 118 yards overall, also the slimmest haul by a Paul Bryant-coached team in the last 71 games.

"The last two years Missouri has been in a basic 5-2 defense," Cornhusker coach Tom Osborne said Tuesday after he worked his offensive team against the "old" defense.

"They resurrected it for the wishbone, figuring to catch Alabama off guard," he said. "And they had so much success with it they have stayed with it and thrown it in once and a while."

Osborne said the Tigers have played it enough that Nebraska has to be prepared for it, but noted that against Kansas State last week they were hardly in it at all.

"If they get in it and they are stopping people you might see a lot of it," Osborne said. "It requires extra work because your linemen have to be pretty sharp. Fortunately, we have worked against it some in getting ready for Miami. Miami played it against Oklahoma, but didn't against us, so it's not totally new."

Just having to get ready for it gives it a nuisance value.

The defense has eight men on or close to the line of scrimmage, which gives a team a better chance to throw against it. The problem throwing, though, is that they can send more people after the passer and cause confusion to offensive linemen in some respects, the Husker coach explained.

Missouri has been particularly tough against Nebraska in the era starting with Bob Devaney's first team. Since then the series stands at 7-6 in favor of the Huskers. Missouri won three in a row in 1967, 1968 and 1969 and will be trying to extend its current string over NU to three.

The Husker squad worked on the freshman grass practice field in pads for about two hours Tuesday. Osborne said he would have liked to have used the field inside Ed Weir track, but since a plastic pipe watering system was installed, the field has developed many small holes and it is too dangerous to risk wrecking an ankle.

The frosh field is flat while the field inside the track is crowned. The passing game can be affected, especially on sideline patterns.

For that reason, Osborne said the Huskers probably will work for a time Wednesday on the AstroTurf field in Memorial Stadium where practices normally are held. This period will be used to get some of the offense on film.

Missouri's Faurot Field, site of Saturday's important Big Eight contest, still has a natural grass surface.

Wingback Curtis Craig, who missed last Saturday's game against Colorado, was running at almost full speed and Osborne said "there's not much question he will be able to play."

The status of offensive guard and specialty team star Steve Lindquist, however, is doubtful. He has a jammed neck in addition to a slight muscle pull. "If he isn't able to practice Wednesday, We probably won't take him on the trip," Osborne said. "He's awfully valuable on the special teams."

Defensive end Dave Redding also is very doubtful with a knee strain. Both he and Lindquist worked out some Tuesday; but Redding wasn't moving very well.

Offensive tackle Bob Lindquist was missing because of a virus, which Osborne hopes is one of the 24-hour varieties.

"He's one of our five real good offensive linemen and is really important to us," Osborne said. "We have some fair backup guys, but they hadn't played very much until last Saturday."

Linebacker Jim Belka, who injured a knee during spring practice and aggravated the injury in early fall camp, underwent knee surgery last weekend and will be out for the season. The junior from Prairie Village, Kan., started spring drills as the No. 1 weakside linebacker candidate. He has not played this season.

MU Pick Still Pleasing To 'Top-Recruit' Brown

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP)—Tailback Curt Brown says he declined overtures from five Big Eight Conference schools to attend Missouri.

And the coach of the Tigers, Al Onofrio, says he can only applaud the decision of the 5-foot-10, 200-pound Brown, a home state product and top find this season.

"I always wanted to come here," said Brown, who last week stepped into a starting role and galloped for 141 yards and two touchdowns in a 35-3 Missouri win over Kansas State.

"I had offers from Colorado, Oklahoma State, Iowa State, Kansas and Kansas State," he noted, "but I chose Missouri because it's close to home."

Brown's chances with the Tigers were actually based on his performances during spring drills following two seasons with Fort Scott Junior College in Kansas.

Not listed in Missouri's two-deep lineups this fall, he soon proved dependable by averaging four yards on 33 carries through the school's first six games.

A golden opportunity arrived for Brown when he was named to start in place of injured Tony Galbreath in Missouri's game last week.

Then, after fumbling at the end of a 16-yard run on his first carry, he shredded Kansas State's defense at a 6.7-yard clip and was the backbone of a 318-yard Tiger running attack.

"He did a temendous job," Onofrio said afterward. "He got more confidence as he went along, and he's got enough speed to go all the way."

Whether Brown, a product of St. Charles, Mo., sees much action this Saturday against third-rated Nebraska will depend in large part on a tender ankle which has slowed Galbreath for four weeks.

"It's his spot," Brown said ungrudgingly of the key Tiger tailback position. "We watch each other and learn from each other. I'm willing to wait my turn."

Brown also said that whereas he formed respect for Kansas State's hard hitting, he anticipates an even rougher afternoon from Nebraska's Black Shirt defense.

"All the games on our schedule are big from here on out," the junior, a parks and recreation major, said, "but I'd say the one in front of us is the biggest one of all."

North's Taylor Earns Honor

By RANDY YORK
Prep Sports Editor

Any 340-yard single game rushing performance is noteworthy. When it happens in Omaha's Metro Conference, the state's most rugged prep league, it's more than noteworthy.

It borders on the unbelievable.

But Frank Taylor's 340 yards rushing last week in a 32-0 Omaha North win over Omaha Ryan should have been even greater, according to his coach, Jerry Wilks.

"It would have been 400, but he had two 25-yarders called back for holding," Wilks points out. "He had an almost unbelievable game."

Taylor's 340 yards on 32 carries, which included touchdown jaunts of 66, 63, 3 and 1 yards, earn the 6-0, 175-pound senior I-back the Sunday Journal and Star's prep Player of the Week award.

All-Time Best?

He accomplished the effort on UNO's AstroTurf. It's believed to be a Metro Conference record and perhaps an all-time Nebraska schoolboy best.

Former Tecumseh standout Tony Davis accumulated 324 yards and that could have been the previous best, although official records are not kept.

"There's no question about it. Taylor's the best back in the Metro," Wilks says. "Tim Wurth (of Burke) and Bob Billinger (of Westside) are good backs, but Taylor is in the class of great high school running backs."

Taylor didn't just burst into prominence. He had rushed for 752 yards in North's first seven games, including a 202-yard performance against eighth-rated Burke and 172 yards against top-rated Westside.

"He just has that natural ability to pick and run," says Wilks. "He does his best job one-on-one. I haven't seen anyone who's been able to tackle him in that situation all year.

"Against Burke, he went 85 yards on the first play," Wilks notes. "Two guys had good, clean shots, but missed. Against Ryan, half his yards were right up the gut on isolations and power plays. That gives you an idea os his strength."

Nebraska Interested

Taylor ran a :04.7 in the 40 last year, but hasn't been timed this year. Nevertheless, "Nebraska is very interested," according to Wilks. "At least they've inquired a lot about him."

Taylor is a solid performer in the classroom, too. "He's a B student, very dedicated," says Wilks. "He's only missed two days of school in four years. Around here at North, that's some kind of record."

Others who'll receive Player of the Week cards include:

Uduak Udofia, Lincoln High — Rushed for 91 yards, scored a touchdown and excelled as defensive back in Links' 10-0 upset win over previously rated North Platte. It was Lincoln High's first win in eight starts.

Kim Baker, York — In win over Class A Beatrice, he rushed for 133 yards on 11 carries and scored two touchdowns. He also punted four times for a 48.75-yard average and keyed offensive attack with outstanding blocking on sweeps. He was credited with eight solo and seven assisted tackles. "It's the best game Kim's ever played for York," according to coach Tom McClelland.

Don Daugherty, Grand Island Central Catholic — After 186-yard performance last week against Hastings Adams Central, this 5-9, 165-pound junior went over 1,000-yard rushing mark for eight games.

Jim Petsch, McCook — Tailback rushed for 162 yards on 22 carries and had touchdown runs of 6 and 29 yards in 25-6 Bison win over Alliance.

Tom Carden, Fremont — Quarterback hit 8 of 20 passes for 155 yards and touchdowns covering 9 and 78 yards as Tigers defeated Columbus, 23-0.

Tom Zitek, David City Aquinas — His 109 yards rushing on 25 carries was the impetus in Monarchs' 16-0 upset of Columbus Scotus.

Jeff Anderson, Centennial — Five-seven, 135-pound senior's 98-yard touchdown catch and 83-yard scoring run less than four minutes later turned tight game against Grand Island Northwest into a runaway.

Rick Vaughn, Omaha Paul VI — Senior linebacker participated in 25 tackles (10 unassisted) and recovered fumble at his own 16-yard line in final minute to preserve 6-0 win over Holy Name.

Mike Novacek, Raymond Central — Senior quarterback came in late in the second quarter and threw a 20-yard touchdown pass in final 37 seconds to give team 12-8 win over Elkhorn Mt. Michael.

Gary Ernst, Hastings St. Cecilia — Junior rushed for 224 yards on 34 carries and scored touchdowns in win over Hebron. Last three-game totals show 528 yards rushing, 7 touchdowns, 1 interception, 4 knockdowns and 26 tackles.

Korey Brill, Bayard — Completed seven of 10 passes for 190 yards and three touchdowns in team's seventh straight win, 30-8, over Minatare.

Mike Steenson, Wolbach — Senior quarterback has completed 55 of 93 passes for 1,204 yards and 20 touchdowns while leading Class D team to seven wins in eight games.

Charles Smith, McCool Junction — Junior halfback rushed for 140 yards on 20 carries, scored two touchdowns and was credited with 10 tackles at safety in 24-20 win over Rising City. He's rushed for 1,003 yards and scored 17 touchdowns in eight games.

Mark Rogers, Sidney — Rushed for 194 yards and a touchdown despite Red Raiders' 27-20 Western Conference loss to unbeaten Kimball.

NU Crew Bids In Four Events

Boston — The University of Nebraska crew Sunday joined 2870 competitors and 685 shells from 134 clubs, schools and colleges in the 11th annual Head of the Charles Regata.

Nebraska competed in 4 of 18 events on the two-day schedule.

The heavyweight men's four covered the three-mile course in 19:14.0 which was good enough to rank 9th out of 40 teams in the Collegiate division and 22 out of 40 in the lite or Olympic Division. Yale won the race in 18:20.7.

Nebraska was hampered in the race by the failure of Boston University to yield to a Nebraska attempt to pass which resulted in forcing the Huskers off course for a mement and a slower time resulted. Boston University was disqualified for their actions.

In making their Boston debut, Nebraska's women's four placed 8th out of 40, finishing with a time of 22:23.4 as compared with first place Yale's time of 20:36.5.

The lightweight men's four finished 22nd out of 40 Nebraska's time was 18:56.2 while the first place U.S. National team finished in 18:04.0.

Nebraska assistant coach Mark Stormberg, in his first race as a singles sculler, finished 7th out of 30 entries in the lightweight Elite or Olympic singles in 22:52.2.

Huskers Favored By 6

The weekly odds listed by Harrah's Reno-Tahoe Racebook show Nebraska a six-point favorite in the Big Eight battle against Missouri Saturday in Columbia.

One thing for sure, the oddsmakers couldn't make a line using comparative scores for the game which will be nationally televised by ABC-TV (Channel 7 locally).

Consider this: Against common opposition, it's a toss-up . . . Nebraska beat Colorado 63-21 . . . Missouri lost to Colorado 31-20 . . . Nebraska squaked by Oklahoma State 28-20 . . . Missouri drubbed Oklahoma State 41-14.

The telecast will begin at 11:30 a.m. and the kickoff is set for noon. The second half of the doubleheader will feature fourth-ranked Southern California against California at Berkeley.

Nebraska hasn't been on a national telecast since 1973 when the Huskers appeared twice. They also had a pair shown nationwide in 1972. They had one regional game in 1972 and two last season. This is their first television appearance this year.

Of course, those figures do not include the national telecasts of bowl appearances.

Bonanza For Big Eight

A school appearing on a national telecast now gets $243,928. Since both NU and MU are from the Big Eight, their shares will be pooled by the conference and distributed to league members. That explains why Oklahoma's ban from TV because of NCAA probation has been so costly to the Big Eight.

Under the NCAA-ABC television contract, the network is permitted to sell 400 minutes of commercials over the entire season, spread evenly through the 20 games on the schedule.

The asking price is $58,000 a minute, but only 87 per cent of the commercial spots have been sold and some were sold below the established rate. Part of the reason is a drop in the ratings from 14 per cent in 1971 to 12 per cent in 1974. Another is the economy.

So much for TV. It's still a question whether viewers will see Missouri tailback Tony Galbreath against the Huskers. He returned to practice Tuesday to test his sore ankle. "He ran fairly well," Coach Al Onofrio said. "The ankle felt pretty good, but he is still not top speed. We'll just wait and see.

Nebraska took a big lead in the "giveaway-takeaway" rankings as a result of their "plus-7" in the turnover battle against Colorado. The Huskers now have taken the ball away from their opponents 15 more times than they have surrendered it on fumbles or interceptions.

The Huskers have had just 11 turnovers to their foes' 26.

Sooners Rank Second

Despite all the giveaways (7) Oklahoma had against Iowa State, the Sooners still are second in the conference at plus-6. What saved them were ISU's six turnovers.

For the year, Oklahoma has had 23 turnovers while forcing foes to lose the ball 31 times. Most of its edge in turnovers came as a result of 10 takeaways from Oregon in the season opener.

Here's how the rest of the conference stands: Kansas, plus 4; Missouri, even (21 each way); Colorado, minus 4; Iowa State and Kansas State, minus 5; Oklahoma State, minus 6.

Here are the other odds for Saturday listed by Harrah's: Oklahoma, 17 over Oklahoma State; Kansas, 13 over Kansas State; and Colorado, 7 over Iowa State.

Nebraska's fourth-place ranking in total defense suffered in the Colorado game. The Huskers now are ninth with an average yield of 230.6 yards a game. That's up from last week's mark of 193.3. Oklahoma jumped two notches to tenth with 231.9 a game.

The Husker splurge of 63 points moved their scoring average to 35.6 a game, fourth in the nation and just three-tenths of a point behind Ohio State. The top two are Alabama (37.4) and Texas (37.0).

Wahoo Neumann In State Playoffs

By RANDY YORK
Prep Sports Editor

Wahoo Neumann, the Sunday Journal and Star's top-rated Clas C-1 football team, can take a slow freight into next weekend's state high school playoffs.

That is to say Neumann can lose to West Point Central Catholic Friday night and still qualify for the state playoffs.

It's a different story though for Class C-2's Scribner, Class D Alliance St. Agnes and eight-man's Adams, the other three top-rated teams in the lower classes.

They're thinking one thing — win.

St. Agnes needs a victory over Class C-1-rated Bayard to withstand a challenge in district 4 from Callaway.

Need Victories

Adams must score a win over Barneston to maintain its edge over district 1 pursuer Ruskin. Scribner must defeat Omaha Holy Name to insure its district championship.

Callaway and Ruskin both have completed regular season play and pin their respective playoff hopes on St. Agnes and Adams getting upset.

Both runnerup teams are unfortunate victims of district placement. Callaway may have the toughest pill to swallow. Its 46.25 point average is the second best in the entire Class D ranks behind St. Agnes.

Although the four No. 1-rated clubs in the lower classes should pass final weekend assignments, it won't be as easy for other highly rated teams.

Plainview, the No. 2 team in Class C-1, plays at seven-time Class B winner Pierce Friday night. Norfolk Catholic and Battle Creek, a pair of unbeatens in the same class, battle Friday night in Norfolk.

Joining St. Agnes with rugged Class D tests this weekend are second-ranked Nelson, third-ranked Lawrence, fifth-ranked Homer and sixth-ranked Loomis.

Nelson at Alma

Nelson plays at Class C-2's fourth-ranked Alma and Loomis hosts C-2's eighth-ranked Pleasanton. Lawrence plays at Hastings St. Cecilia and Homer hosts Ponca. St. Cecilia and Ponca are unrated, but highly respected Class C teams.

Of the four lower class state championship races, Class C-1 may offer the most interesting package, if Neumann, Plainview, Centennial and Gibbon all qualify.

The first three have gained solid rating reputations by not only dominating from within their own classes, but also by scoring impressive victories over Class B opponents.

Eight-man competition numbers the most teams where unbeatens are likely to miss the playoffs. Ruskin, Decatur and Sidney St. Pat's figure to miss the playoffs by finishing runnerup within their districts despite unbeaten records.

Fourth-ranked Shelby is perhaps an even more unfortunate victim. Since it is a Class C school, Shelby is ineligible for the playoffs.

Extra Ticket Sellers Hired For Superdome

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Superdome and the New Orleans Jazz agreed Tuesday to split the cost of hiring extra ticket sellers to avoid the sort of crush that resulted in one woman being knocked flat and several near fistfights.

The crush occurred Sunday night when 13,000 fans tried to funnel through two gates opened for the National Basketball Association game between the Jazz and the New York Knicks.

Both Jazz and the Superdome agreed that more gates had to be opened for future contests, but they stuck on who was to pay for additional personnel to man them.

Jazz officials maintained that their contract called for them to pay no more than $4,500 per game for such services, with the Dome absorbing any costs above that maximum.

"That ain't the way I read it," said Ben Levy, stadium executive director, before a meeting scheduled to iron out the differences.

"The purpose of that clause was to protect Jazz in instances when they expected a low attendance. They could tell us that they didn't want to spend the whole $4,500, then they could have the opportunity of cutting back."

"They wanted us to absorb all the cost," said Andrew Martin, principal owner of the NBA team. "Ben's in a tough spot. He has to go before the legislature and justify any expenditures.

"We had them, as far as the contract is concerned. But we agreed to compromise.

"Now, we'll sit down across the table for each game and figure out how many people we'll need and split any cost above $4,500 50-50.

"We paid over $9,000 rent for Sunday night, and then there's the concessions, the parking lot. They're making money with us."

Jazz pays either $2,400 a game or eight per cent of the gate, whichever is greater. They have played two of their 42 scheduled home games—before crowds of 9,000 for the opener against the Detroit Pistons and 13,000 for the Knicks game.

Martin said that seats are scaled from $15 apiece for 300 courtside seats to $1.50 for general admission seats high up in the Dome's upper reaches. The bulk of the seats range from $7.50 to $3.50, and Martin said the crowds averaged paying $5.50 apiece for the two games.

No Surprise; Lynn Gets Rookie Of The Year Honor

BOSTON (UPI) — Some fans say Boston Red Sox super rookie Fred Lynn looks like Ted Williams. Others swear he looks like Carl Yastrzemski. The resemblance is more than skin deep.

It was with his bat and glove that Lynn, who was named Tuesday the Baseball Writers Association of America rookie of the year, shows the greatest resemblance to two of Boston's finest players.

"He's a complete ballplayer. He can do it all," said Boston Manager Darrell Johnson.

"He's the best young hitter to come into the league in years. I've never seen a rookie with such good bat control," said Baltimore's star pitcher, Jim Palmer. "He has an amazing ability to go with the pitch."

Lynn's rookie statistics compare very favorably to those compiled by Williams in his first season. A 6-foot-1, 181-pounder, Lynn hit .331 last season, second only to Rod Carew in the American League. He led the league in slugging, doubles and runs scored and knocked in 105 runs.

Williams, a 6-foot-3, 190-pounder, had a .327 average, 31 homers and 145 runs batted in his rookie year.

Lynn's rookie statistics far surpassed Yastrzemski's. In fact, they almost were as good as Yaz's output in 1967 when he won the triple crown.

But Lynn, unlike the tempestuous Williams, is quiet, even shy.

"I always was shy, at the back of the crowd, the last to wear flares," said Lynn. "And I'm still not the kind who likes to be a public personality."

In the field Lynn came up with so many diving, tumbling catches that fans at Fenway Park almost began to take them for granted. The sight of Lynn sitting on the centerfield grass holding aloft a ball he had tumbled 10 feet to catch became almost as familiar as the call of the the popcorn vendors in the stands.

Lynn, who was selected 41st in the college draft out of Southern Cal, had one of the finest nights at the plate in recent history when he knocked in 10 runs on five hits, including three home runs, against Detroit in July.

"When I found out I had 10 RBI's, I figured somebody must be kidding," he said. "That's a whole month's work."

"I just try to go day by day. Play one game at a time. I don't think too far into the future," he said earlier this season.

McGinnis 'Paying' For 76ers

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers got their first return on the reported $3 million they are paying George McGinnis.

A crowd of 18,020 fans showed up Monday night for McGinnis' home debut, the largest crowd ever to see a basketball game in this town. As one wit put it, "Gee, you'd of thought the Flyers (Stanley Cup champions) were playing."

Pro basketball has taken a back seat to hockey in recent years. The 76ers fell on lean days. The team was bad. One season they won nine and lost 73. They haven't made the playoffs since the 1970-71 season.

Things got so bad that owner Irv Kosloff admitted he was embarrassed to give away tickets.

Kosloff recalled the pain of those dismal years as he sat in his first row seat and watched the new 76ers blast the Los Angeles Lakers 117-104 Monday night. He heard the thunderous applause, the cheering.

"It proves one thing," he said. "This is a town that appreciates good basketball, knows good basketball. That's why things fell off so quickly. The people also know bad basketball when they see it."

The 76ers were perennial contenders in the 1960s. They had Wilt Chamberlain, Billy Cunningham, Chet Walker, Luke Jackson, Walli Jones. Then the team was broken up, poor trades, Cunningham's defection to the new American Basketball Association. The victories became fewer, and so did the fans.

Last year, Kosloff brought in Pat Williams, a young but veteran NBA executive, as general manager. He told Williams his checkbook was open. Build a winner, were the instructions.

Cunningham came back. Steve Mix and Fred Carter had been acquired in trades. Doug Collins was obtained in the player draft. There was some light in the tunnel, and it was further illuminated by the signing of talented rookies Darryl Dawkins, Joe Bryant and Lloyd Free.

Then came the big one, George McGinnis, bought out of the rival ABA in a move that gives the 76ers pro basketball's highest payroll.

When the 6-foot-8 McGinnis was introduced before Monday night's first home game, he received a 40-second standing ovation. The big guy didn't disappoint them. He scored 19 points, had 16 rebounds, handed out seven assists, made four steals. And he keyed a devestating fast break.

"You ain't seen nothing yet," he promised after the game. "Wait until I get adjusted, know who I'm playing against. Then I'll show you some moves."

McGinnis is confident of his superb ability.

"Hey, those signs around town that say, 'Let George do it,' that's not it. It's gotta be let the 76ers do it. As long as we keep that team concept, we're going to win. I don't run this show. You don't win with individuals."

Maybe not. But McGinnins, and the other acquisitions, have suddenly brought hope and excitement to a basketball team that had been without anything for almost five years.

Reds' Anderson Honored By AP

Cincinnati (AP) — Sparky Anderson thinks the prestige of being world champoions will intensify pride in the Cincinnati Reds and help make him a better manager.

"The World Series title will bring us closer together," said Anderson, who was honored by The Associated Press Tuesday as National League Manager of the Year.

"It's a great honor, but this award belongs to the whole team," said the 41-year-old manager who directed the Reds to an awesome 108 victories, a third National League title in six seasons and the city's first World Series crown in 35 years.

"I'm not talking about a dynasty, but you are going to see our best teams over the next 4-5 years," said Anderson, baseball's winningest manager over the past six years with an average of 97 victories per season.

"This really gave us what we needed. We could be what Oakland was," said Anderson, who guided the Reds to a stunning 20-game margin over the defending National League champion Los Angeles Dodgers.

Anderson was a runaway winner in the manager derby, outdistancing runnerup Danny Murtaugh of Pittsburgh 289-61, in the AP's nationwide poll of sports writers and sportscasters.

San Diego's John McNamara was third with 30 votes, Danny Ozark of Philadelphia had 18 and Red Schoendienst of St. Louis 7. Voting was done prior to the playoffs and World Series.

Anderson, who has said he owes his baseball career to two people — his father and the late baseball figure Lefty Phillips — showered praise on his coaching staff.

"I always felt I knew my baseball, but my coaches helped keep me on an even keel. They helped me become a better manager. They've done so many little things that rubbed off on me," said Anderson, the son of a South Dakota house painter.

Alex Grammas, Anderson's top assistant, said the Cincinnati manager probably ranks as the best mind in baseball. "I know some people say Gene Mauch. I never worked with Mauch. I can only tell you this guy Anderson gets as many wins out of a team that the team has in it."

Anderson's major moves switching Pete Rose to third base no slugger George Foster could be squeezed into the lineup-triggered the Cincinnai surge that included a streak of 41 victories in a 50-game stretch.

"I knew that the older guys would come through, but the big surprise was the way the younger guys — Foster, Ken Griffey, Will McEnaney and Rawly Eastwick — came along for us," said Anderson.

Anderson, who played only one year of major league baseball, credits Phillips with molding his managerial background. "Lefty was like a father to me. I owe everything to him." Phillips was managing the San Diego Padres in 1969 when the Reds lured Anderson, his third base coach, away to become their manager.

He hopes he imparts something to his players other than a winning philosophy. "The biggest mistake that happens to pro athletes is they forget where they came from. The money's always going to be there but that doesn't mean you have to change yourself as a person."

TV Hearings Continue Wednesday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hearings on legislation lifting the local television blackouts of sold-out games resume Wednesday before a House communications subcommittee with its chairman calling eventual passage "the best bet in Congress."

Don Ruck, vice president of the National Hockey League, and Simon Gourdine, deputy commissioner of the National Basketball Association, are scheduled to testify Wednesday with Pete Rozelle, National Football League commissioner, set for Thursday.

On Friday, Bowie Kuhn, baseball commissioner, will appear along with Rep. L. A. (Skip) Bafalis, R-Fla., and Robert T. Howard, president NBC television network, and Alvin Rush, senior vice president, program and sports administration.

Rep. Torbert MacDonald, D-Mass., chairman of the subcommittee, held a one-day hearing last month on his legislation to make permanent the anti-blackout law, enacted in 1973, but was forced to recess the sessions when he entered the hospital with an apparent flareup of bronchitis.

The currrent law, which expires Dec. 31, lifts local TV blackouts, of sports events when the stadium is sold out 72 hours in advance. MacDonald's new measure also would cut the period to 24 hours for all post-season games in professional baseball, basketball and hockey.

Last week, Sen. John O. Pastore, D-R. I., chairman of the Senate communications subcommittee, introduced a bill to extend the current law for another three years.

"One might well argue that the legislation should be made permanent," said Pastore, who was joined by Sen. J. Glenn Beall, R-Md.. However, it has been contended that several factors — the NFL players' strike, the general decline in the state of the economy, and competitive threats from newly established sports leagues — have precluded a full and certain evaluation of the effect of the law."

"I do believe that fairness and prudence counsel for a three-year extension of the basic antiblackout law," he said.

MacDonald made clear his legislation will be enacted, calling it the "best bet in Congress," despite the opposition from the sports leagues, especially the NFL.

He said the NFL's reluctance to air home games after the stadiums are sold out "is chutzpah at its highest."

In his remarks, however, he said there are other issues with which he is concerned even though he has chosen not to deal with them yet in legislation-form.

"This is the same kind of "public-be-damned" attitude that forced Congress to act in 1973," he said.

AL Award To Lynn

NEW YORK (UPI) — Fred Lynn, a shy, soft-spoken ex-collegian whose "silver bat" and "golden glove" were largely responsible for bringing the Boston Red Sox their first pennant in eight years, Tuesday was named the American League's Rookie of the Year by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

The 23-year-old center fielder, also the leading candidate for the league's most valuable player award, was named on every one of the Rookie of the Year ballots from 24 baseball writers around the country, two from each AL city. He received 23½ of a possible 24 points as one writer, unable to decide between Lynn and his teammate, Jim Rice, split his vote.

Lynn thus became the fourth Red Sox player to win top rookie honors since the BBWAA originated the award in 1947. Other Red Sox' winners include Walt Dropo in 1950, Don Schwall in 1961 and Carlton Fisk in 1972. Fisk is the only player ever to be unanimously acclaimed as the AL's top rookie.

Only two years off the campus of Southern California, the 6-foot-1, 185-pound Lynn had one of the best rookie seasons in modern times. He batted .331 to finish second to Rod Carew for the AL batting title and also led the league in slugging, runs scored and doubles. In addition he walloped 21 homers and drove in 105 runs.

Lynn enjoyed one of the finest games ever played by a major leaguer on June 18 when he drove in 10 runs against the Detroit Tigers in a 15-1 Boston victory. Lynn rapped out five hits, including three homers and a triple, that night and tied a major league record for most total bases in a game (16).

A left-handed hitter and thrower, Lynn also earned a reputation as one of the league's best defensive outfielders. A graceful fielder with loping strides that reminded old-timers of Joe DiMaggio, Lynn saved many a game for the Red Sox with spectacular catches. He was particularly skilled in the diving catch, knowing by instinct the proper moment to dive for the ball and seldom coming up without it. His arm also drew raves from rival players.

During the World Series against Cincinnati, Lynn, who was born in Chicago, Ill. but now lives in Santa Monica, Calif., batted .280 with seven hits, including a double and a homer, and batted in a club-leading five runs. He also fielded 24 chances without an error and saved a 5-4 victory for Luis Tiant in the fourth game with a superb over-the-shoulder catch off Ken Griffey in the ninth inning.

Lynn, who went to Southern California on a football scholarship but concentrated on baseball after his freshman year, credits the training he received from Trojans' coach Rod Dedeaux with helping him make it to the big leagues so soon.

"Coach Dedeaux drills you so much on fundamentals, over and over in such monotony until they're habit," says Lynn. "It has to help you. There's also that feeling you get there that you can't lose, and you play that way."

One of the most impressive things about Lynn during his first year in the major leagues was his poise. Throughout the entire stretch run for the AL East Division title, and on through the AL playoffs and World Series, the youngster kept his cool and continued to come up with the timely hits and key defensive plays.

Fred Lynn

"There are things in the majors that make it easier than the minors," said Lynn. "I remember two years ago at Bristol. I was tired near the end of the season and in a slump and thinking, 'Isn't this thing ever going to end?' In the big leagues, not only are the conditions better, but with the crowds and situation, it is easier to get yourself geared mentally to get up every day."

There is one thing about his sensational season Lynn could just as soon do without, however. He does not like being a celebrity.

"I always was shy, at the back of the crowd, the last one to wear flares," said Lynn. "And I'm still not the kind who likes to be a public personality. I believe in signing autographs and I like to talk to people, but public appearances? No way."

In any other year, Rice, the other half of Boston's dynamic duo, might have walked away with top rookie honors. Serving part of the year as a designated hitter before becoming the regular left fielder, the 22-year-old Rice batted .309 with 22 homers and 102 runs batted in. His season ended on a sad note, however, when he broke his wrist against Detroit on Sept. 21, forcing him to miss the playoffs and World Series.

Lynn and Rice were the first pair of rookies from the same team in the league's history ever to bat .300 and drive in 100 runs.

Morgan Heads All-Stars

NEW YORK (UPI) — Second baseman Joe Morgan, catcher Johnny Bench and outfielder George Foster of the world champion Cincinnati Reds were named Tuesday to the UPI's 1975 National League All-Star team.

Morgan, whose ninth-inning single in the seventh game of the World Series enabled the Reds to win their first world championship since 1940, was the only unanimous choice for the team in voting by 20 UPI baseball correspondents around the country.

Also named to the team were first baseman Steve Garvey of the Los Angeles Dodgers, shortstop Larry Bowa of the Philadelphia Phillies, third baseman Bill Madlock of the Chicago Cubs, outfielders Greg Luzinski of the Phillies and Dave Parker of the Pittsburgh Pirates, starting pitchers Tom Seaver of the New York Mets and Randy Jones of the San Diego Padres and relief pitcher Al Hrabosky of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Seaver, Luzinski and Hrabosky received 19 votes each while Jones had 18, Parker and Garvey 16 each, Bench and Madlock 15 each, Bowa 11 and Foster five.

Smoker Scheduled

The second amateur boxing smoker of the season sponsored by the Lincoln Association of Master Barbers is scheduled for Wednesday night at Pershing Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

Many new entries are expected for the card, which will be drawn after weighins at 6 p.m.

Three Omaha clubs, including the Foxhole Club, O'Connor Club and the Omaha Police are expected to bring teams to face the Lincoln clubs for Wednesday's smoker.

Easterday figures to have the top boxers again with Neil Wilhelm, at 145-pounds, who has won his last two bouts including a decision over Gabe Valdez of the O'Connor Club last week in Omaha.

Heavyweights Stan Holen of Verdigre and Doug Metzger of Lincoln are also expected to fight as is 159-pounder Bruce Pearson.

"We're hoping for a much bigger card than last time when we had to contend with the short notice decision of the Parole Board to not allow boxers from the State Penal Complex to fight," said Master Barber President Larry Masters.

"Jim Brown, who coached the complex boxers in the past will bring his team as will Ray Menefee and Easterday," Masters said.

ISU's Hardeman May Start

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Quarterback Buddy Hardeman apparently will draw the starting assignment Saturday when Iowa State hosts Colorado in a Big Eight Conference football game here.

The sophomore signal caller, sidelined with a broken wrist since Oct. 11, resumed fullspeed workouts Tuesday during the Cyclones' two hour drill.

"Hardeman is looking good despite the layoff," said Coach Earle Bruce. "We plan to start him as of now with Tom Mason and Mike Tryon in reserve."

Tryon and middle guard Randy Koch, both sidelined since Saturday with sprained ankles, were expected to return to full workouts Wednesday, Bruce said.

However, starting middle guard Maynard Stensrud probably will miss the Colorado game. Stensrud broke his right hand during a game against Kansas 10 days ago.

Freshman tailback Dexter Green worked with the first team offense Tuesday. "He is showing good movement and speed and positive signs of improvement," Bruce said.

Oklahoma

NORMAN, Okla. (AP)—Most of the University of Oklahoma's walking wounded returned to the practice field Tuesday in preparation for Saturday's intra-state football clash with Oklahoma State.

Split end Billy Brooks and fullback Jim Littrell were the only two players who didn't participate in the Sooners' lengthy practice session, but both ran on their own.

Head coach Barry Switzer said several of his players are still limping, but he was pleased that they were fighting through practice sessions.

Switzer said the sooners had a good practice both offensively and defensively. Oklahoma worked harder than usual on the kicking game.

'Always, in an even ballgame when two teams are evenly matched, the kicking game is very important," Switzer said. "The kicking game has won the Texas game for us the past two years.

"Defensively we had a good practice also. we worked on Oklahoma State's wishbone and shotgun formations."

Kansas State

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Playing old rival Kansas this week has done something for Kansas State's football drills.

"The concentration has really been good," Coach Ellis Rainsberger said after Tuesday's practice.

The coach said he was impressed with sophomore Kerwin Cox, now starting at tailback for Roscoe Scobey who was moved to fullback.

"We've had to shift a lot of personnel around due to injuries," the coach said, and because of that Tuesday's session was spent learning new duties.

Oklahoma State

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP)—Oklahoma State whipped through "a normal workout" behind tightly-closed doors Tuesday as the Cowboys prepared for Saturday's home date with Oklahoma.

"Practice was okay—nothing exceptional," said coach Jim Stanley. "I think we'll build up each day as we get closer to the game."

Stanley said reserve nose-guard Chris Dawson "looked good at times. He's made the move from defensive tackle pretty smoothly.

"Brent Robinson, Phillip Dokes and James White all looked good today."

The Cowboys worked hard on their passing game Tuesday with Stanley claiming: "I was pleased with Charlie Weatherbie's execution and our entire passing game. Scott Burk looked good, too. He's still our No. 1 quarterback."

Kansas

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Although Kansas Coach Bud Moore still expressed concern over the injury situation his team is faced with, he was somewhat more optimistic about it after Tuesday's practice.

Moore announced that nose-guard Jim Emerson would miss Saturday's game with Kansas State but defensive players Tom Dinkel, Steve Jones, Kurt Knoff and Franklin King, who missed workouts for the second straight day, are only listed as doubtful starters now.

"We will have more contact tomorrow," Moore said. "We have a tendency to forget how to hit on Saturday if we don't hit some during the week. I'm more worried about our own people and whether we want to win bad enough than I am worried about what K-State will do."

Moore also said practices would have to be rearranged after the change from Daylight Savings Time to Standard Time. He said practices would start earlier and if some people had classes they would just have to miss practice or part of it.

Ohio State's Griffin Wants National Title

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Archie Griffin, college football's most heralded player, would swap all his personal achievements for one team goal: a national championship.

"I would," the Ohio State senior tailback said Tuesday. "That national championship is the most important."

That's some trade. Griffin was the college game's Player of the Year as its 1974 Heisman Trophy winner. Twice he has been the Big Ten Conference's Most Valuable Player and an All-American. He ranks as the greatest rusher in major college history.

Still, as Ohio State trainer Billy Hill said, "His attitude hasn't changed since the first day he walked through the door. He's so down to earth, humble, unbelievable."

His coach, Woody Hayes, marvels over the way Griffin has handled the swarms of writers and fans this year. Hayes himself has lost his cool in similar situations.

"Arch acts like a little, old man, the way he shows maturity much past his years," said Hayes of the greatest player he's coached in 30 seasons. "I've only seen Arch upset once in his four years here. That was up at Michigan when a defensive back twisted his leg after a tackle.

"I've never heard him swear. I never hear him raise his voice to a teammate in practice."

Griffin says Hayes missed another time when he was upset. "When I was a freshman against Michigan State," he said, "about every time I touched the ball I dropped it."

Earlier in his freshman season, then assistant coach Rudy Hubbard talked Hayes into playing Griffin against North Carolina. He responded with a school record 239 yards.

Since then, he's started 39 straight games, producing a record 28 straight regular season performances of over 100 yards rushing. His 4,730 career yards, reached last week, wiped out Ed Marinaro's record as major football's all-time leader.

All this from a 5-foot-9, 182-pounder? "It's not the size of the dog in the fight, but the size of the fight in the dog," said Griffin, one of seven football-playing sons of a Columbus sanitation worker.

His backfield coach, former Marshall runner Mickey Jackson, said, "He's a giant, but he never makes you feel like he is. Once he steps on that field, that little extra from within comes out."

Hayes relishes talking about Griffin's unselfish leadership.

"Arch could be big-headed. He's just the opposite. When you have the complete affection of every single player on your team, that's something," he said.

Cornelius Greene, quarterback of the No. 1-ranked Buckeyes, knows Griffin as well as any student. They roomed together three years.

"The first time I saw him as a freshman, we were running sprints. Woody Roach and I had run 4.5s for the 40. Back in Washington D.C., we had a lot of 185-190 pound guards. So I thought Arch was a guard.

"I turned to Woody and said, 'Man, you see that guard. He ran a 4.4.'"

Now, the two love to needle each other. "The thing he learned from me was how to dress," said a chuckling Greene, known as "Flam" by his teammates for his flamboyant clothes.

Greene, an outstanding high school basketball player, and Griffin, who never played the game at in high school, serve as the guards on an intramural team. They hassle over their lack of passing.

"Corny likes to shoot. But I come across half court and shoot the ball anyway. He gets on me for it," said Griffin.

Griffin can become the first player in history to win two Heisman Trophies.

Four others, Doc Blanchard of Army (1945), Doak Walker of SMU (1948), Vic Janowicz of Ohio State (1950) and Navy's Roger Staubach (1963) won before their senior years and had the chance. They failed.

Margaret Griffin is sure her fourth son will repeat as the Heisman winner. "When he was in high school, I dreamed Archie was standing with the Heisman Trophy. And I had the dream more than once," she said.

McKay Rumors Continue

Los Angeles (AP) — Talk continues to circulate around John McKay, who isn't saying anything.

Rumors that the coach of the unbeaten Southern California Trojans will be moving to Tampa to take the helm of the National Football League's new franchise there in 1976 have steadily intensified.

McKay's only serious comment is "no comment."

"I'm more interested in what the Trojans are going to do for the rest of the football season," he says.

The Southern Cal coach and athletic director reportedly has been offered an extremely lucrative multiple-year contract to go to Tampa, including fringe benefits which run the total to more than $2 million.

McKay has said numerous times that he will wait until the end of the season to announce his plans, but talk around top NFL circles indicates he's already committed to the expansion team.

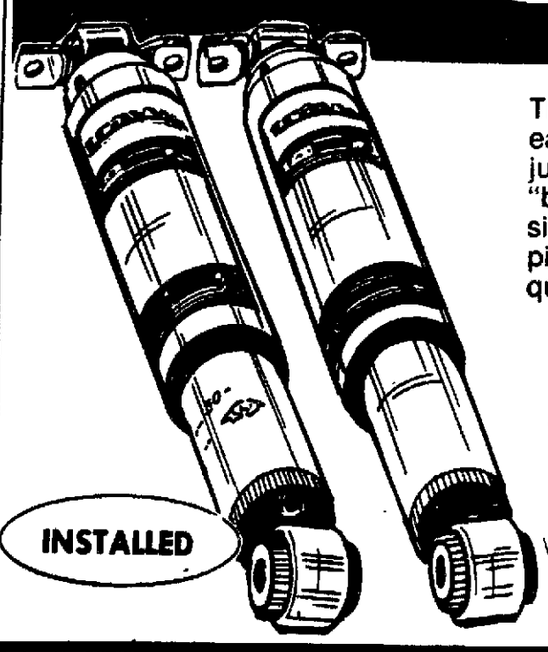

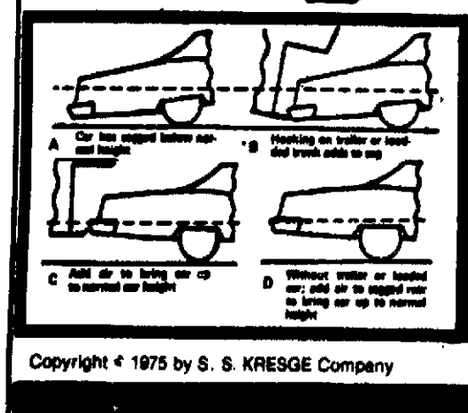

McKay earlier joked at a banquet about who was "going to Tampa with me," and who was being "left behind."

After the Trojans' 24-17 victory over Notre Dame in South Bend Saturday, the tone in the locker room was that McKay was going out a winner in his favorite rivalry.

Normally reserved in such situations, McKay appeared particularly jubilant. He jumped onto a table and said, "You'll always remember this. We never lost to Notre Dame in 1975."

If he is thinking about next year and the Tampa Bay Bucaneers, it is apparently not detracting from his '75 success with the Trojans. Southern Cal, 7-0 and nationally fourth-ranked, is 3-0 in Pacific-8 play and one of the handful of teams with perfect records in the country.

$13,344 Is Taken In By Auction At LHS

Principal Bill Bogar reported Tuesday Lincoln High School raised $13,344 in the 10 hours and 45 minutes it took to auction off more than 2,000 outdated items last weekend.

One roll-top desk brought $621.

"A few of the faithful were still there" at 11:45 p.m. when the last bid came in, Bogar said.

He estimated the crowd at about 2,400. Registered bidders totalled 596, and 382 of them who bought something spent an average of almost $1,200 an hour.

While that auction fever raged, the LHS band sold baked goods that netted $108, concessions brought in $344, old "Links" yearbook sales were $540 and LHS Histories, $154. Thus, gross receipts were $14,490.

Bogar said the auction receipts will apply to deficits that totalled $11,800 in accounts for publications, music, the LHS History, literary magazine, L-Club newsletter, Broadway musical and several others.

The LHS History deficit "was the big one," Bogar said, at $5,054 accruing since 1971. The other deficits had developed in the past year.

Bogar explained that those accounts are among 63 different ones at LHS, the total current balance for which is in the black with a $3,600 surplus.

But auction proceeds "can erase any minus accounts wer have" in the student activity fund, he said.

Every item was sold, Bogar noted. Those going for more than $100 included a balance, a lathe, two oak sofas, one four-drawer and one six-drawer oak filing cabinet, all six roll-top desks (the minimum was $280), and a science cabinet.

A peacock that was given to the LHS zoology department in 1926 brought $46, an astonished Bogar noted. And the old school gong (since replaced by an audio system) drew $52.

Bogar said the school probably paid $10 to $15 for the gong new. Many items sold in excess of their original price tags.

Twenty-four small desks that Bogar said "we'd been trying to sell for $10" went for $30 to $50 each, totalling $589; 88 chairs brought $1,264 and 60 tables, $1,020.

And bidders paid $374.25 for 129 mortars and pestles.

Six old microscopes that LHS had tried to sell for $10 each went for a total of $186, and 29 pictures, $200.

Morning Briefing
A Sports Roundup

FOOTBALL

New Mexico quarterback Steve Myer was named National College Back of the Week by The Associated Press after he broke four school records and tied two in leading New Mexico to a 44-34 upset of nationally-ranked Arizona Saturday. Myer hit 26 of 38 passes for 351 yards and four touchdowns. Others considered included Vince Ferragamo and Dave Butterfield of Nebraska, Robert Turner of Oklahoma State and Missouri's Curt Brown.

Quarterback Jim Plunkett of the New England Patriots will undergo new surgery on his injured shoulder, coach Chuck Fairbanks announced. Plunkett told Fairbanks he would be out for five days to a week.

Bud Dudley, executive director of the Liberty Bowl, can't think of a more appropriate team than Navy for the 1975 game Dudley said Navy would "be a natural" since the Liberty Bowl will be the first sports event designated as an official part of the Bicentennial Celebration.

Iowa coach Bob Commings said he favors a return to one-platoon football. "We can get 15 real good players at Iowa and could compete under one-platoon football. But we just can't get 30," Commings said.

Defensive tackle Dave Roller, a WFL refugee who signed with the Green Bay Packers last week shortly before NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle barred such signings, was in uniform Sunday when the Packers lost to Pittsburgh. The Packers said his signing was nullified.

The Miami Dolphins re-signed wide receiver Cotton Speyrer to replace tight end Jim McFarland, who was put on the injured reserve list for the remainder of the season because of back injuries suffered in Sunday's game against Buffalo.

The Kansas City Chiefs announced the signing of running back Doug Dressler to a free agent contract. The Chiefs waived running back Cleophus Miller.

San Francisco 49ers' defensive back Mel Phillips will miss Sunday's game against Detroit because of a broken right thumb.

The Detroit Lions are looking at Jack Concannon and George Farmer to bolster their injury-depleted quarterback and wide receiver corps. Neither has been signed, however, and Detroit has one open space on its roster unless it puts either or both Bill Munson and Greg Landry on the injured reserve list. Munson and Landry, both quarterbacks, are scheduled for knee surgery Wednesday.

The Chicago Bears acquired tight end Gary Butler from the Kansas City Chiefs on waivers, a Bears spokesman said.

The Portland Thunder, which went under when the WFL folded last week, has debts totaling about $94,000.

Defensive back Pete Athas was placed on waivers by the Cleveland Browns.

The Green Bay Packers waived running back Les Goodman off the injured reserve list.

University of Cincinnati flanker Harold Lee and linebacker Otis Mitchell were bound over to a grand jury on charges of grand theft.

The eligibility case of Mississippi State football player Larry Gillard bounced back to state courts when a federal judge ruled he lacked jurisdiction to handle it.

Carl Marasco, director of player personnel for the Chicago Bears, was in the intensive care unit of Presbyterian-St. Lukes Hospital with an "undiagnosed ailment."

BASEBALL

The St. Louis Cardinals obtained Don Kessinger from the Chicago Cubs in exchange for relief pitcher Mike Garman and a player to be named later. The Cardinals also acquired Charlie Chant, an Oakland A's farmhand, in exchange for infielder Larry Lintz.

Righthanders Jim Palmer of the Baltimore Orioles and Tom Seaver of the New York Mets were named the top major league pitchers for the 1975 season by the Sporting News.

An attorney for New York Yankee outfielder Elliott Maddox said that his client is suing New York City for $1 million for a knee injury sustained last summer during a game at the city-owned stadium.

Manager Whitey Herzog tapped an old friend and veteran baseball man, Chuck Hiller, to be his third base coach for the Kansas City Royals.

Grady Hatton, the Houston Astros' director of player development and former manager of the Astros, has been fired by the Astros.

HOCKEY

The New York Rangers, outscored 23-4 in their last three games, put virtually their entire 21-man roster up for waivers. "It is a league policy that waiver transactions are treated as confidential, so I regret I cannot comment on this," Rangers general manager Emile Francis said. However, UPI has learned that the recallable waiver action has in fact been taken involving the entire club, with the exception of defenseman Doug Jarrett, acquired Tuesday from the Chicago Black Hawks for goaltender Gilles Villemure.

The California Seals announced that winger Jim Pappin, picked up a week ago from the Chicago Black Hawks in exchange for Joey Johnston, has agreed to join the team but not until Nov. 2.

The Cincinnati Stingers have posted with the WHA a $1,500 bond that will be forfeited if the team receives an "intent to injure" penalty against either the Quebec Nordiques or Winnipeg Jets. The bond was posted after a stick-swinging incident against Quebec in an exhibition game.

TENNIS

The Phoenix Racquets have obtained the World Team Tennis draft rights to Chris Evert, Jim Walker, Racquets' president, has acknowledged.

Czechoslovakia wants to play the Davis Cup final against Sweden before Christmas to enable its star player Jan Kodes to take part in the Australian International Tennis Championships at the end of this year, the CTK News Agency said.

Ilie Nastase threw a tantrum and got a warning from the umpire but went on to beat Egypt's Ismail el Shafei 9-8, 6-4 on the second day of the Paris Indoor Open. Arthur Ashe beat Dick Stockton 6-4, 4-6, 6-2 in other action.

OTHER SPORTS

The Los Angeles Lakers have suspended guard Gail Goodrich and replaced him on their roster with 7-footer Jim McDaniels. Goodrich is reportedly seeking a contract between $275,000 and $300,000, after making an estimated $150,000 last season.

Former heavyweight champion Jack Dempsey remained in a New York hospital undergoing "evaluation tests." His condition was described as "satisfactory" by a hospital spokesman.

The University of Iowa basketball team will make its first appearance in Sioux City, Iowa, Nov. 16 in a preseason intrasquad game.

Sandra Palmer, who finished in a seventh place tie on last week's tour stop, has increased her earnings to $75,513, tops on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour, it was announced.

Georges Carpentier, who fought and lost boxing's first "million dollar gate" bout against Jack Dempsey in 1921, died Monday night after a heart attack at the age of 81.

Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp. announced it is withdrawing sponsorship of the Vels-Parnelli Jones and Black American Racers auto racing teams at the end of this year.

Southeast Girls Drop Papillion

Lincoln Southeast's girls' volleyball team downed Papillion in straight sets Tuesday night 15-8, 15-11 at the Southeast gym.

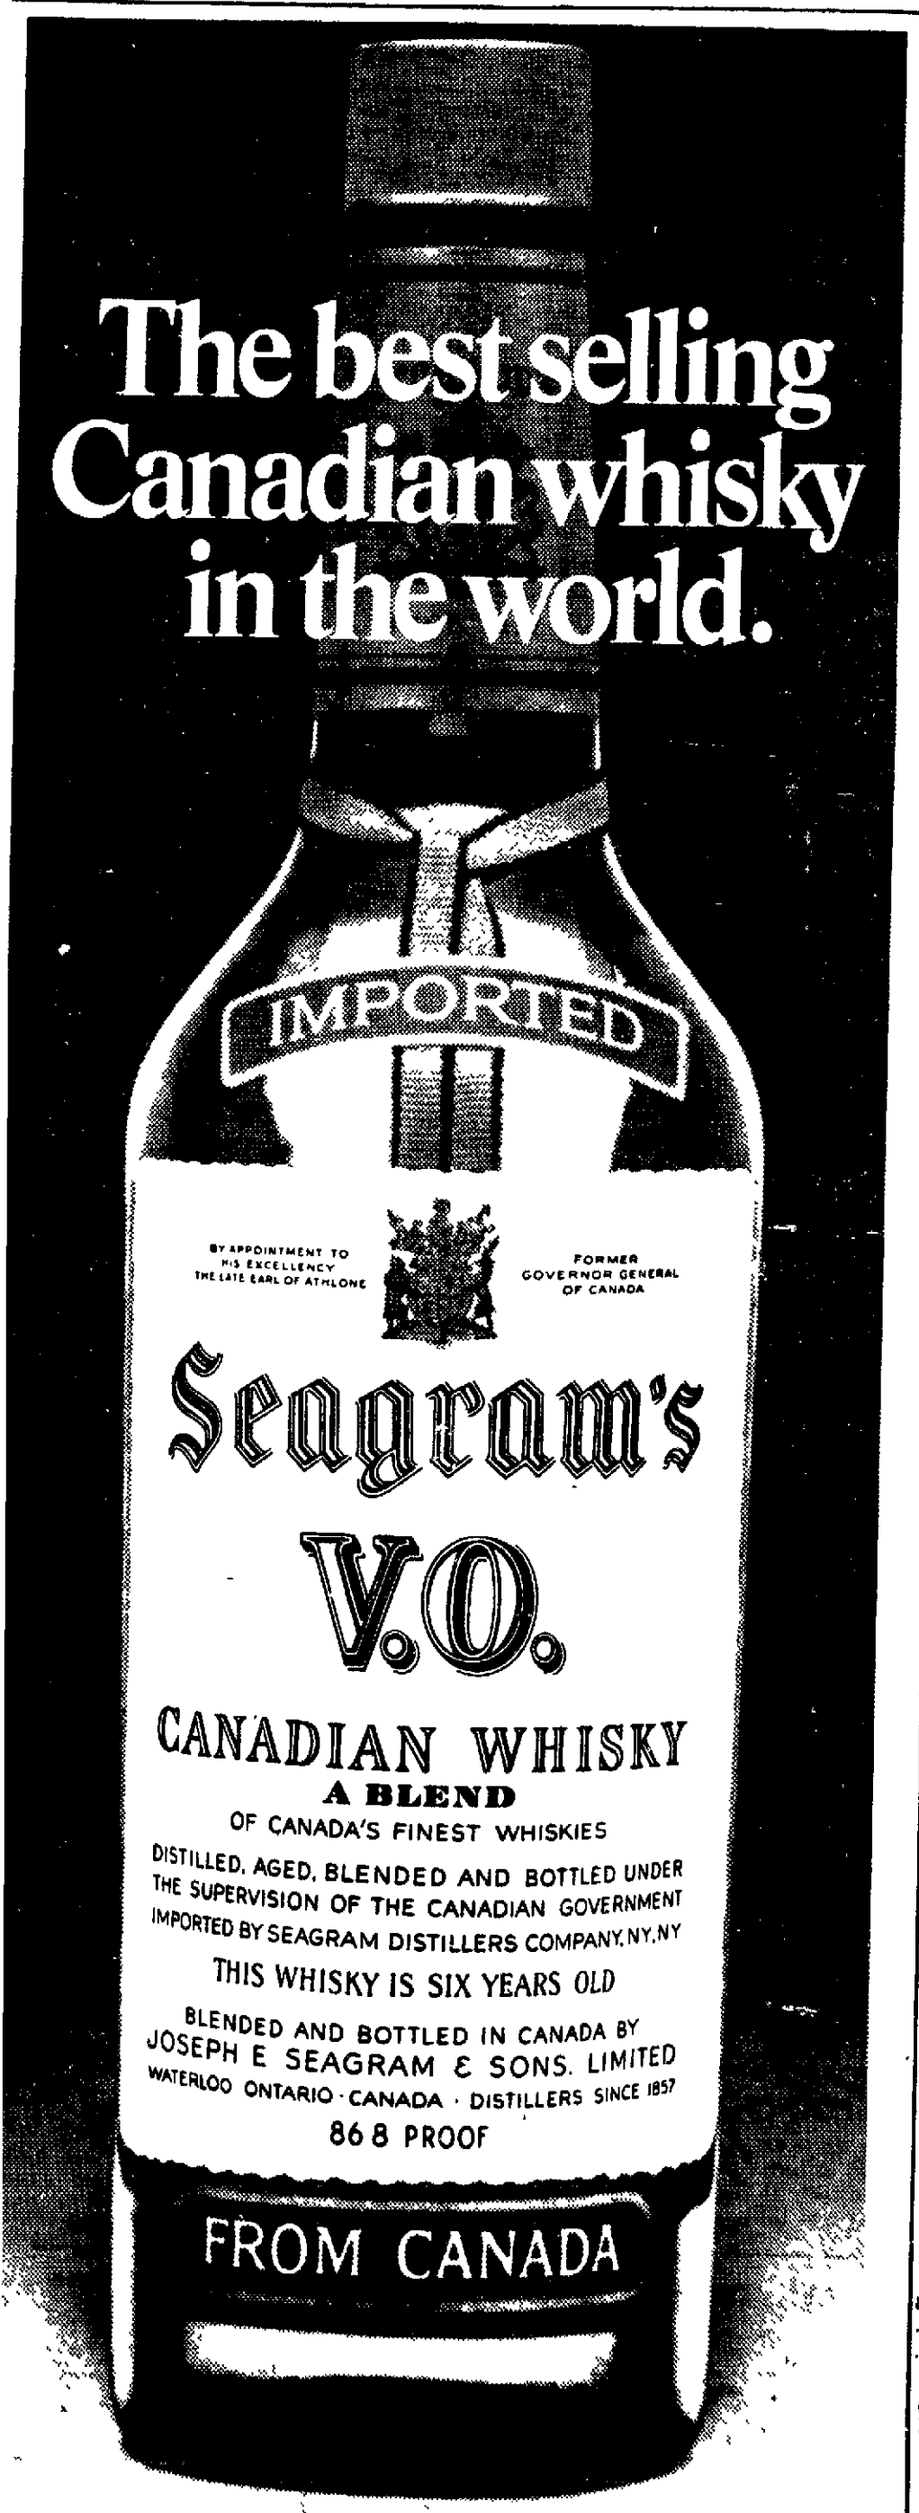

Kelly O'Neal scored 13 points to lead the Knights' attack. Jan Stoehr added seven straight serves and Christa Young spiked eight in a row for LSE, now 6-6.

Papillion evened the score in the reserve match, winning 15-10, 7-15, 15-6

Baseball Players To Hunt

Silver Creek — Major League baseball players from both leagues have joined the list of celebrities coming to the fourth annual Grand National Mixed Bag Hunt beginning here Thursday.

Kansas City Royals Fred Patek and Buc Martinez head the players' list. The two Royals are also the only non-pitchers on the list. Others include Chicago White Sox pitcher Roger Nelson, making his fourth trip to the Grand.

The Minnesota Twins will be sending two pitchers, Tom Burgmeier and Dave Goltz, while the Chicago Cubs will be represented by Darold Knowles and the Milwaukee Brewers are sending Lou Kraus, former Oakland pitcher.

More sports, Pages 54, 55

Co-coordinator Larry Meyer also said the women's celebrity team, headed by Texan Pat Auld, was forced to cancel due to illness and illness in families.

Festivities begin Thursday afternoon with a trapshoot and Thursday evening raccoon spotting hunt. Friday opens with a duck hunt in the morning, a brushpile building over noon and a rabbit and squirrel hunt in the afternoon.

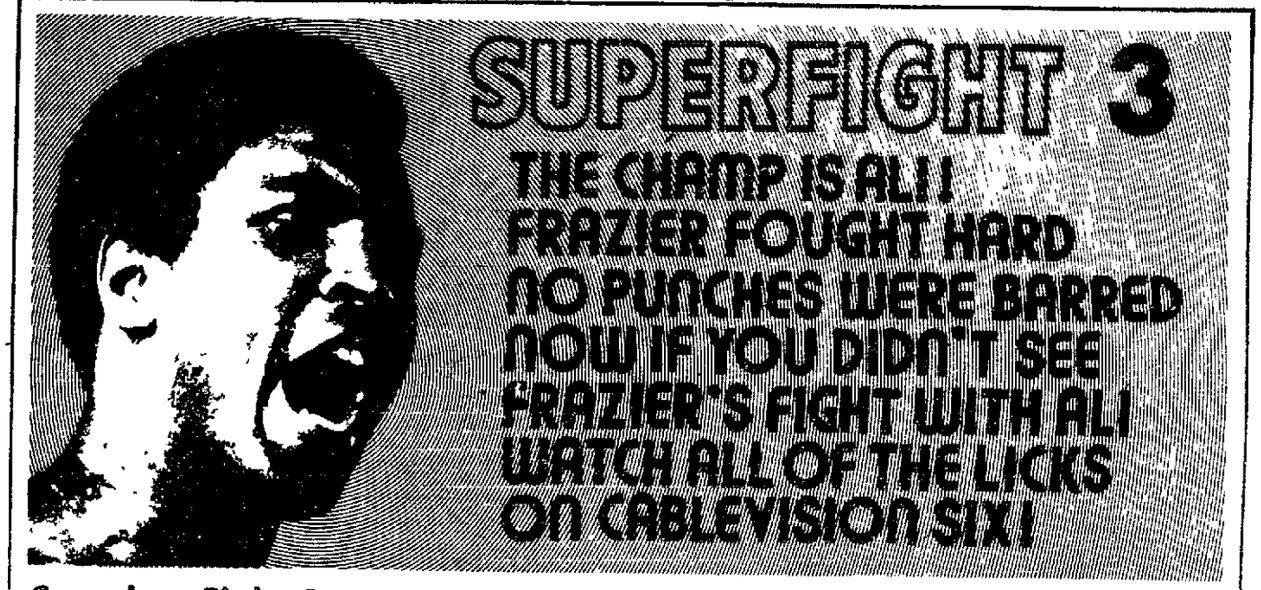

Saturday, tabbed Conservation Day, will be highlighted by a pheasant and quail hunt on opening day, a celebrity trapshoot in the mid-afternoon and the closing banquet that evening.

Other celebrities attending this year's hunt, which is aimed at showing there is more to hunting than the killing of wildlife, include Gov. J. J. Exon and National Rifle Assn. executive vice-president Gen. Maxwell Rich.

Goodrich Suspended

Inglewood, Calif. (UPI) — The Los Angeles Lakers Tuesday suspended Gail Goodrich, their disgruntled guard who is embroiled in a contractural dispute with Laker owner Jack Kent Cooke, and replaced him on their roster with 7-footer Jim McDaniels.

Bell Tops In Rushing

By The Associated Press

Southern California's Ricky Bell has a 176.1 yards-per-game rushing average to lead the nation's collegians, weekly statistics released Tuesday by the National Collegiate Athletic Association show.

Bell's average per game is almost 40 yards more than the No. 2 man, Long Beach State's Herb Lusk.

Gene Swick of Toledo continues as the leader in the passing and total offense departments while Brown's Bob Farnham is rated No. 1 in pass catching.

Swick has a completions-per-game mark of 18.0 yards on 144 completions in 226 passing attempts and over-all has accounted for 1,913 yards for a 239.1 yard average in total offense.

Butterfield Honored By Big 8

Kansas City, Mo. (UPI) — Nebraska cornerback Dave Butterfield had a particularly good reason to play with more than his usual skill Saturday against Colorado.

The 5-10, 182-pounder was a high school quarterback at Kersey, Colo., and was bypassed by the Buffaloes.

"It was a particularly important game for Dave because he was someone they (Colorado) overlooked a couple of years ago," said Nebraska coach Tom Osborne.

"Of course, that can happen to anyone. I'm sure there have been Nebraska players we have overlooked who have gone on and been fine players somewhere else."

Butterfield was shifted to defensive back at Nebraska and, after a red-shirt year, became a starter as a sophomore last season.

Butterfield was one of many Nebraska defensive players who were impressive Saturday, in Cornhuskers 63-21 victory over the nation's 10th-ranked team.

Butterfield made eight tackles, five unassisted, recovered two fumbles and broke up a pass.

For his efforts, Butterfield Tuesday was named the Big Eight defensive player of the week.

As for the fumble recoveries, Osborne said, "mostly, that's a case of being in the right place at the right time.

"And there were a lot of balls laying around on the ground, too. He had a lot of opportunities."

Colorado fumbled seven times, losing six.

Butterfield was a unanimous choice for the weekly defensive award by the conference's three-man panel of newsmen.

Other nominees were Iowa State tackle Tom Randall, Oklahoma State tackle James White, Kansas safety Chris Golub, Missouri end Bob McRoberts and Oklahoma linebacker Bill Dalke.

Midland Adds Another Game

Fremont — The Midland Warriors, rated eighth in the NAIA, and Texas Lutheran College of Seguin, Tex. also rated in the top ten, have agreed to meet in an additional game Nov. 15 at 2 p.m. in Seguin.

It will be the first meeting for the two small-school football powers who both went undefeated in 1974. Both teams are currently 7-1.

The Texas Bulldogs won the 1974 NAIA division II championship defeating Missouri Valley 42-0 in the finals, while Midland captured the Mineral Water Bowl over Friends University in post season play.

Extra Ticket Sellers Hired For Superdome

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The Superdome and the New Orleans Jazz agreed Tuesday to split the cost of hiring extra ticket sellers to avoid the sort of crush that resulted in one woman being knocked flat and several near fistfights.

The crush occurred Sunday night when 13,000 fans tried to funnel through two gates opened for the National Basketball Association game between the Jazz and the New York Knicks.

Both Jazz and the Superdome agreed that more gates had to be opened for future contests, but they stuck on who was to pay for additional personnel to man them.

Jazz officials maintained that their contract called for them to pay no more than $4,500 per game for such services, with the Dome absorbing any costs above that maximum.

"That ain't the way I read it," said Ben Levy, stadium executive director, before a meeting scheduled to iron out the differences.

"The purpose of that clause was to protect Jazz in instances when they expected a low attendance. They could tell us that they didn't want to spend the whole $4,500, then they could have the opportunity of cutting back."

"They wanted us to absorb all the cost," said Andrew Martin, principal owner of the NBA team. "Ben's in a tough spot. He has to go before the legislature and justify any expenditures.

"We had them, as far as the contract is concerned. But we agreed to compromise.

"Now, we'll sit down across the table for each game and figure out how many people we'll need and split any cost above $4,500 50-50.

"We paid over $9,000 rent for Sunday night, and then there's the concessions, the parking lot. They're making money with us."

Jazz pays either $2,400 a game or eight per cent of the gate, whichever is greater. They have played two of their 42 scheduled home games—before crowds of 9,000 for the opener against the Detroit Pistons and 13,000 for the Knicks game.

Martin said that seats are scaled from $15 apiece for 300 courtside seats to $1.50 for general admission seats high up in the Dome's upper reaches. The bulk of the seats range from $7.50 to $3.50, and Martin said the crowds averaged paying $5.50 apiece for the two games.

TV Hearings Continue Wednesday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hearings on legislation lifting the local television blackouts of sold-out games resume Wednesday before a House communications subcommittee with its chairman calling eventual passage "the best bet in Congress."

Don Ruck, vice president of the National Hockey League, and Simon Gourdine, deputy commissioner of the National Basketball Association, are scheduled to testify Wednesday with Pete Rozelle, National Football League commissioner, set for Thursday.

On Friday, Bowie Kuhn, baseball commissioner, will appear along with Rep. L. A. (Skip) Bafalis, R-Fla., and Robert T. Howard, president NBC television network, and Alvin Rush, senior vice president, program and sports administration.

Rep. Torbert MacDonald, D-Mass., chairman of the subcommittee, held a one-day hearing last month on his legislation to make permanent the anti-blackout law, enacted in 1973, but was forced to recess the sessions when he entered the hospital with an apparent flareup of bronchitis.

The currrent law, which expires Dec. 31, lifts local TV blackouts, of sports events when the stadium is sold out 72 hours in advance. MacDonald's new measure also would cut the period to 24 hours for all post-season games in professional baseball, basketball and hockey.

Last week, Sen. John O. Pastore, D-R. I., chairman of the Senate communications subcommittee, introduced a bill to extend the current law for another three years.

"One might well argue that the legislation should be made permanent," said Pastore, who was joined by Sen. J. Glenn Beall, R-Md.. However, it has been contended that several factors — the NFL players' strike, the general decline in the state of the economy, and competitive threats from newly established sports leagues — have precluded a full and certain evaluation of the effect of the law."

"I do believe that fairness and prudence counsel for a three-year extension of the basic antiblackout law," he said.

MacDonald made clear his legislation will be enacted, calling it the "best bet in Congress," despite the opposition from the sports leagues, especially the NFL.

He said the NFL's reluctance to air home games after the stadiums are sold out "is chutzpah at its highest."

In his remarks, however, he said there are other issues with which he is concerned even though he has chosen not to deal with them yet in legislation-form.

"This is the same kind of "public-be-damned" attitude that forced Congress to act in 1973," he said.

No Surprise; Lynn Gets Rookie Of The Year Honor

BOSTON (UPI) — Some fans say Boston Red Sox super rookie Fred Lynn looks like Ted Williams. Others swear he looks like Carl Yastrzemski. The resemblance is more than skin deep.

It was with his bat and glove that Lynn, who was named Tuesday the Baseball Writers Association of America rookie of the year, shows the greatest resemblance to two of Boston's finest players.

"He's a complete ballplayer. He can do it all," said Boston Manager Darrell Johnson.

"He's the best young hitter to come into the league in years. I've never seen a rookie with such good bat control," said Baltimore's star pitcher, Jim Palmer. "He has an amazing ability to go with the pitch."

Lynn's rookie statistics compare very favorably to those compiled by Williams in his first season. A 6-foot-1, 181-pounder, Lynn hit .331 last season, second only to Rod Carew in the American League. He led the league in slugging, doubles and runs scored and knocked in 105 runs.

Williams, a 6-foot-3, 190-pounder, had a .327 average, 31 homers and 145 runs batted in his rookie year.

Lynn's rookie statistics far surpassed Yastrzemski's. In fact, they almost were as good as Yaz's output in 1967 when he won the triple crown.

But Lynn, unlike the tempestuous Williams, is quiet, even shy.

"I always was shy, at the back of the crowd, the last to wear flares," said Lynn. "And I'm still not the kind who likes to be a public personality."

In the field Lynn came up with so many diving, tumbling catches that fans at Fenway Park almost began to take them for granted. The sight of Lynn sitting on the centerfield grass holding aloft a ball he had tumbled 10 feet to catch became almost as familiar as the call of the the popcorn vendors in the stands.

Lynn, who was selected 41st in the college draft out of Southern Cal, had one of the finest nights at the plate in recent history when he knocked in 10 runs on five hits, including three home runs, against Detroit in July.

"When I found out I had 10 RBI's, I figured somebody must be kidding," he said. "That's a whole month's work."

"I just try to go day by day. Play one game at a time. I don't think too far into the future," he said earlier this season.

McGinnis 'Paying' For 76ers

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia 76ers got their first return on the reported $3 million they are paying George McGinnis.

A crowd of 18,020 fans showed up Monday night for McGinnis' home debut, the largest crowd ever to see a basketball game in this town. As one wit put it, "Gee, you'd of thought the Flyers (Stanley Cup champions) were playing."

Pro basketball has taken a back seat to hockey in recent years. The 76ers fell on lean days. The team was bad. One season they won nine and lost 73. They haven't made the playoffs since the 1970-71 season.

Things got so bad that owner Irv Kosloff admitted he was embarrassed to give away tickets.

Kosloff recalled the pain of those dismal years as he sat in his first row seat and watched the new 76ers blast the Los Angeles Lakers 117-104 Monday night. He heard the thunderous applause, the cheering.

"It proves one thing," he said. "This is a town that appreciates good basketball, knows good basketball. That's why things fell off so quickly. The people also know bad basketball when they see it."

The 76ers were perennial contenders in the 1960s. They had Wilt Chamberlain, Billy Cunningham, Chet Walker, Luke Jackson, Walli Jones. Then the team was broken up, poor trades, Cunningham's defection to the new American Basketball Association. The victories became fewer, and so did the fans.

Last year, Kosloff brought in Pat Williams, a young but veteran NBA executive, as general manager. He told Williams his checkbook was open. Build a winner, were the instructions.

Cunningham came back. Steve Mix and Fred Carter had been acquired in trades. Doug Collins was obtained in the player draft. There was some light in the tunnel, and it was further illuminated by the signing of talented rookies Darryl Dawkins, Joe Bryant and Lloyd Free.

Then came the big one, George McGinnis, bought out of the rival ABA in a move that gives the 76ers pro basketball's highest payroll.

When the 6-foot-8 McGinnis was introduced before Monday night's first home game, he received a 40-second standing ovation. The big guy didn't disappoint them. He scored 19 points, had 16 rebounds, handed out seven assists, made four steals. And he keyed a devestating fast break.

"You ain't seen nothing yet," he promised after the game. "Wait until I get adjusted, know who I'm playing against. Then I'll show you some moves."

McGinnis is confident of his superb ability.

"Hey, those signs around town that say, 'Let George do it,' that's not it. It's gotta be let the 76ers do it. As long as we keep that team concept, we're going to win. I don't run this show. You don't win with individuals."

Maybe not. But McGinnis, and the other acquisitions, have suddenly brought hope and excitement to a basketball team that had been without anything for almost five years.

Reds' Anderson Honored By AP

Cincinnati (AP) — Sparky Anderson thinks the prestige of being world champoions will intensify pride in the Cincinnati Reds and help make him a better manager.

"The World Series title will bring us closer together," said Anderson, who was honored by The Associated Press Tuesday as National League Manager of the Year.

"It's a great honor, but this award belongs to the whole team," said the 41-year-old manager who directed the Reds to an awesome 108 victories, a third National League title in six seasons and the city's first World Series crown in 35 years.

"I'm not talking about a dynasty, but you are going to see our best teams over the next 4-5 years," said Anderson, baseball's winningest manager over the past six years with an average of 97 victories per season.

"This really gave us what we needed. We could be what Oakland was," said Anderson, who guided the Reds to a stunning 20-game margin over the defending National League champion Los Angeles Dodgers.

Anderson was a runaway winner in the manager derby, outdistancing runnerup Danny Murtaugh of Pittsburgh 289-61, in the AP's nationwide poll of sports writers and sportscasters.

San Diego's John McNamara was third with 30 votes, Danny Ozark of Philadelphia had 18 and Red Schoendienst of St. Louis 7. Voting was done prior to the playoffs and World Series.

Anderson, who has said he owes his baseball career to two people — his father and the late baseball figure Lefty Phillips — showered praise on his coaching staff.

"I always felt I knew my baseball, but my coaches helped keep me on an even keel. They helped me become a better manager. They've done so many little things that rubbed off on me," said Anderson, the son of a South Dakota house painter.

Alex Grammas, Anderson's top assistant, said the Cincinnati manager probably ranks as the best mind in baseball. "I know some people say Gene Mauch. I never worked with Mauch. I can only tell you this guy Anderson gets as many wins out of a team that the team has in it."

Anderson's major moves switching Pete Rose to third base no slugger George Foster could be squeezed into the lineup-triggered the Cincinnai surge that included a streak of 41 victories in a 50-game stretch.

"I knew that the older guys would come through, but the big surprise was the way the younger guys — Foster, Ken Griffey, Will McEnaney and Rawly Eastwick — came along for us," said Anderson.

Anderson, who played only one year of major league baseball, credits Phillips with molding his managerial background. "Lefty was like a father to me. I owe everything to him." Phillips was managing the San Diego Padres in 1969 when the Reds lured Anderson, his third base coach, away to become their manager.

He hopes he imparts something to his players other than a winning philosophy. "The biggest mistake that happens to pro athletes is they forget where they came from. The money's always going to be there but that doesn't mean you have to change yourself as a person."

10 Teams Left For Orange Bid

MIAMI (UPI) — The list of college football teams under consideration for an invitation to meet the Big Eight Conference champion in the Orange Bowl on New Years night has been reduced to 10, the Orange Bowl committee announced Monday.

Scouts will watch the Penn State-Maryland game on Saturday. Both schools are still on the list.

Others remaining in contention include Alabama, Florida, Michigan, Ohio State, Southern California, UCLA, Texas and Texas A & M.

$13,344 Is Taken In By Auction At LHS

Principal Bill Bogar reported Tuesday Lincoln High School raised $13,344 in the 10 hours and 45 minutes it took to auction off more than 2,000 outdated items last weekend.

One roll-top desk brought $621.

"A few of the faithful were still there" at 11:45 p.m. when the last bid came in, Bogar said.

He estimated the crowd at about 2,400. Registered bidders totalled 596, and 382 of them who bought something spent an average of almost $1,200 an hour.

While that auction fever raged, the LHS band sold baked goods that netted $108, concessions brought in $344, old "Links" yearbook sales were $540 and LHS Histories, $154. Thus, gross receipts were $14,490.

Bogar said the auction receipts will apply to deficits that totalled $11,800 in accounts for publications, music, the LHS History, literary magazine, L-Club newsletter, Broadway musical and several others.

The LHS History deficit "was the big one," Bogar said, at $5,054 accruing since 1971. The other deficits had developed in the past year.

Bogar explained that those accounts are among 63 different ones at LHS, the total current balance for which is in the black with a $3,600 surplus.

But auction proceeds "can erase any minus accounts wer have" in the student activity fund, he said.

Every item was sold, Bogar noted. Those going for more than $100 included a balance, a lathe, two oak sofas, one four-drawer and one six-drawer oak filing cabinet, all six roll-top desks (the minimum was $280), and a science cabinet.

A peacock that was given to the LHS zoology department in 1926 brought $46, an astonished Bogar noted. And the old school gong (since replaced by an audio system) drew $52.

Bogar said the school probably paid $10 to $15 for the gong new. Many items sold in excess of their original price tags.

Twenty-four small desks that Bogar said "we'd been trying to sell for $10" went for $30 to $50 each, totalling $589; 88 chairs brought $1,264 and 60 tables, $1,020.

And bidders paid $374.25 for 129 mortars and pestles.

Six old microscopes that LHS had tried to sell for $10 each went for a total of $186, and 29 pictures, $200.
